

Instincts and emotions, should they be suppressed or harnessed?

By Roger W. Babson

Published by the Fleming H. Revell Publishing Company, New York, 1927, copy 3

<http://babsc.iii.com/record=b1085324~S0>

Designed as a contemplative record of observances of behavior rather than a scientific study of human instincts and emotions, this book is the journal Babson kept while he took a month's vacation from statistical research to get a retrospective view of what he had learned. He traveled alone to the woods of Maine to write words that he hopes will help to solve the problems in all realms of daily life. Contents include "Emotions and Health," "Instinct for Knowledge" and "Spirit Greater than Law."

Babson College Archives copy: Gift of Roger W. Babson to the Babson College Archives, 1927

5½ x 8", red cloth cover, 181 pp.

Archives

BF

685

.B3

1927