JAMES P. LOUGHLIN

Secretary-Treasurer
Massachusetts State Labor Council, AFL-CIO

James P. Loughlin has been involved in the management of labor unions in Massachusetts since 1937, when he was elected vice president of an AFL Brewery Workers’ Union local.

After serving with the U.S. Navy in World War II, Loughlin returned to union activities serving as recording secretary of Local 95 of the Hotel, Restaurant, and Bartenders’ Union in Massachusetts. He later was elected secretary-treasurer and business agent of that local, an office he held until February 1962 when he was chosen to serve as secretary-treasurer of the Massachusetts State Labor Council, AFL-CIO.

In a letter to the BOSTON GLOBE responding to an editorial about labor and business, Loughlin wrote, “You state, ‘Massachusetts is America’s Great Britain, a tight little island that imports too much of what it needs.’ This is and has been labor’s cry for quite a period of time. We have both imported and exported many of our jobs away, leaving us with a bad economy. Very little, if anything, has been done to help bring jobs into this state or hold the jobs that are here.”
BARBARA M. WERTHEIMER

Labor Program Specialist, Cornell University
Metropolitan Center of the New York State School of Industrial and Labor Relations

Barbara Wertheimer is an expert on the involvement of women in labor unions. As Labor Program Specialist for Cornell University's Metropolitan Center of the New York State School of Industrial and Labor Relations, Barbara Wertheimer has been instrumental in developing programs for women in labor unions.

Her latest, Trade Union Women's Study Program, is funded by a Ford Foundation grant and is designed to study the barriers that keep working women from participating more fully in their trade union organizations. This program is based on the results of her year-long study of women in New York City unions which revealed that the participation of women members is jeopardized more often by lack of information, training, and experience than by lack of interest.

A graduate of Oberlin College, Ms. Wertheimer has worked with the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America as an organizer and education director. She earned a Master of Arts degree from New York University, and has served as Community Services Consultant for the New York State Division of Housing and Community Renewal.
President
United Auto Workers
Founder's Day Address

Leonard Woodcock has been president of the United Auto Workers since June 1970, when he assumed the position at the time of Walter Reuther's death. He was elected to a two-year term as the union's president at the organization's 23rd Constitutional Convention in 1972.

The son of a union man, Woodcock worked his way up the ladder in the UAW, serving as regional director, first administrative assistant to Reuther, and vice president.

In 1970, Woodcock led the UAW in its contract negotiations with the auto industry's "Big Three" and won historic gains for his union.

In settling the UAW's 67-day strike against General Motors, the union negotiating team led by Woodcock won restoration of full cost-of-living protection for UAW members. The Nixon administration praised this agreement as a model of responsible collective bargaining.

Woodcock now faces his toughest test as he copes with the effects of the energy crisis on the automobile industry and the consequent layoffs of thousands of UAW members.
