Student Government

November 29th Student Government meeting was brief. After roll and acceptance of last week’s minutes the meeting got underway.

The first order of business was the speech by guest speaker Kevin McLaughlin of Peer Advisors. He said that Peer Advisors have changed their organizational structure by having it run solely by students. They need more students however, and they hope to expand their role on campus and in the community. He also announced that the next training session will be next semester.

The next item on the agenda was vice president’s reports. Lisa Gibbs, Executive V.P., announced that the Constitution Committee will have its final meeting on November 30th and will have recommendations for SG next week. Lisa Gibbs also reported for the absent Kevin Richardson, V.P. Social, because he had a previous engagement. It was reported that SoCo and Alpha Kappa Psi will sponsor Chuck and Helen at Knight Auditorium on December 8th. Jackie Giordano reported that the Class of 1990 will use $720 to sponsor a formal at Roger’s on December 2nd.

Following the reports, SG passed our a survey. The purpose of these surveys were to get the representatives’ responses to current activities at the meetings. Also, to get reactions to the office and increase efficiency of their responsibilities. Following the completion of the questionnaires this weeks Student Government meeting was adjourned.

Counseling

Counseling services, Larry Haydu, and Dr. Susan Paklund are counselors that will be more than happy to help any student.

As counselors, their main concerns are to help students define, understand, and seek means of dealing with their problem. According to these professionals, students should seek their assistance when their personal and emotional difficulties begin to interfere with their everyday lives - the last thing a college student needs is an added hindrance to bog them down.

The main problem the counseling services at Babson have to overcome is getting themselves known to the students - a lot of them don’t know that this service exists. There are advertisements in the Babson Free Press and pamphlets are readily available, but students don’t seem to pay too much attention to them.

Babson students are horrendous consumers. Handling over large sums of money and demanding minimal service, large sums are appropriated for pay for than making room for your bath in a few classrooms with professors each week. Certainly there are many administrative expenses, but there are also those designed to socially enhance a student's time at Babson.

Let us begin with the presentations, workshops, art exhibitions, concerts, dances, and parties funded from tuition monies and mandatory fees. While students have always voted with their pockets, keeping attendance very low, in the past few years this situation has turned abysmal. If these events are not worth going to then why is it reasonable to pay for these events. For the price you pay you should take advantage of opportunities to plan these events and demand them when they are not offered.

It seems the only interest students have in common is apathy. I was recently informed that I will pay $170 each and every month for 120 months to repay my student loans. Ten years of my life to pay for the past four. Everyone can recite the figures, but few feel the true impact behind what they are consuming. Why is the Globe - the Babson Experience.

Speaking of paying for ten years reminds me of a comment a friend once made in a Sears store. Referring to a lay-away plan for washers and dryers, as we passed by. "They charge, oh, ten dollars a month for the rest of your life." Well, yesterday I received my first phone call for a donation to Babson (making me an official alumni). Somehow that is what they will like to do. I pay for my four years for the rest of my life (and perhaps even after).

The administration must realize that in the case of Babson, since these target donors attended the school, they consider whether their personal experience was worthy of being perpetuated, forgetting how their own apathy affected this experience. This leaves it incumbent upon the administration to effect student involvement to insure the future health of the institution.

Computer Crunch

Traffic is forecasted to be extremely heavy this weekend at the Horn Computer Center. Computer users are advised not to wait until the last minute. Do the work as early as possible.

The busiest weekend for computer usage in the history of the library will be this weekend.

Most of the traffic will be a result of the last "Policy Weekend" of the semester. There will also be the usual end-of-semester rush to get projects done. Past experience has shown that Friday night and all day Saturday are fairly smooth sailing but if users wait until any time after noon on Sunday they may experience severe tie-ups and delays of up to several hours.

Sincerely,
George Reeeck
Announcing the Formation of Babson's "NEW VENTURE GROUP"

Announcing the formation of Babson's NEW VENTURE GROUP. There will be a brief introductory meeting Thursday, December 8th, at 7:00 pm. In Tomasso Hall, room 107. Open to both graduate and undergraduate applicants. The NEW VENTURE GROUP will be working with student and local entrepreneurs to expand their businesses. The group will also initiate its own start-ups. Those students interested in the areas of entrepreneurial strategy, new venture development, and business turnovers please attend.

No Respect for Roger?

Outrageous! What? The name Roger's Pub (presumably copyrighted). The was suggesting it infected the name of Roger Babson with a virus it is powerless to remove. If these same clowns had submitted the name "Willard's Pub" for the Marriott operated campus pub it would have spelled sheer lack of respect for their Founder's name. Willard Marriott and Roger Babson had like ecclesiastical background. Only after their organizations "went public" did Babson and Marriott interests open a bar. It must be clearly understood and respected that this occurred after they were no longer able to lavish their personal attention on their enterprises. Few of us, thankful for the heritage of these founders, can tolerate mischievous humor that is so blatantly disrespectful of Roger Babson's name.

To paraphrase a column recently in your student newspaper: The die is already cast with respect to "things" that have been done or bought to furnish this oasis. FORGET THEM! It is your voice that must, in homage to Babson College and the name of Roger W. Babson, request that responsible persons from both Babson and Marriott furnish a statement to The Babson Free Press explaining how the use of the name "Roger's Pub" shows any respect for the name, Roger W. Babson.

Then, should the powers agree that the name "Roger's Pub" be nixed; What to do with those new pub mugs? J. Willard Marriott started his root beer business under a District of Columbia law dating back to the 1890's requiring that mugs be sterilized in boiling water for five minutes. Business was good requiring frosting glasses fast. Or, they served so fast that when dropping huge numbers of empty, but cool, mugs in the boiling water "a sudden cracking of glass sounded like a Youkon River ice pack breaking up in the springtime". Try another suggestion -- serving only A&W Root Beer -- on the whole lot of Roger's Pub mugs and anyone from Boston to Salt Lake City will hear the breaking of glass and breathe a sigh of relief for having the "outrage" at Babson College removed. CHEERS!!!

Sincerely,

Graduate Program

By Jill Ivan*

New ideas are always being put into effect with the graduate program," stated Madge Lewis, the graduate registrar. Most everyone in this division are new to Babson College, this is Ms. Lewis's second year and the dean's first. There are two major changes in this division, one is that they strongly encourage work experience before a prospective graduate student applies and two is the idea of having a five year limit on transferable credits.

Services to have them come speak to their inhabitants. These presentations may concern, among many other things, alcoholism, eating problems, or just basic troubles one would encounter in their college years. Still, there are those who are oblivious to the existence of such services.

Another problem confronting these counselors is the fact that many students are afraid to get professional help. Many students refer to these types of counselors as "shrinks," and Dr. Fahland admits that "The term 'shrink' definitely has a negative connotation." Parents and families have constant fears that their children will have serious emotional problems, and it is very difficult for them to admit that there is a definite problem. Realizing and defining the problem is the first, and most important, step towards curing it. Students must see that these counselors are nothing to be afraid of, and that they are only here to help.

If you have a serious problem or if you're not quite sure, don't hesitate to take measures to see these people. You have nothing to lose, all appointments are strictly confidential and the first ten are free of charge. "Everyone hits a point sometime in their life when they need help," says Dr. Fahland, and this is the place to get the help you need. For more information on the counseling services available to you as a Babson student, please pick up pamphlets at the Babson Health Center, talk to your R.D. or R.A., or simply call Human Relations Services at 233-4950 and explain your situation; they will be delighted to assist you.

Most of the required courses that are needed for the graduate program are the same as the undergraduate requirements which enable the undergraduate to fulfill M.B.A. conditions in one year of classes. In the near future there will be a limited time, of five years, for credits to be transferred from any school including Babson. "The reason for this is because of how fast new techniques change and become obsolete," said Allyson Brierley, Assistant Dean of the graduate program. This new system is hoped to take place by the next fall term. With these fresh minds at work the graduate program is sure to be improved. The changes are already taking place with the results to show a sure sign of progression to keep up with the top business schools.

B & G

Since the new rules have been in effect, Mr. Sullivan cannot comment on the schools regulations but he can say that there hasn't been the 8-10 kicked in doors a week and that the campus is generally much cleaner. "Because we don't have to clean up these messes we can do more constructive work rather than reconstructive work."

The buildings and grounds department has a good deal of responsibility to the Babson community. All of the workers have a different assigned area or task. Those green trucks that can be found scattered over the grounds are, remember, doing "everything."
Jews of the East

I am an Overseas Chinese, generations removed from the homeland of my forefathers. Hundreds of years ago, my ancestors left mainland China, perhaps without realizing they would never return. They left for the same reasons many immigrants left for America - political uncertainty, oppression, famine, and unemployment. Where we are today and the consequences we are having to bear could not have been anticipated.

They ended up in the Malay peninsula, which is known today as Malaysia. Many Chinese have been in Malaysia longer than most Americans can lay claim to being in the United States. By most standards, we seem to done very well for ourselves. Although we make up only 40% of the population, we control 70% of the Malaysian economy. We have worked hard to achieve a higher per capita income than the indigenous Malays, although they dominate the government.

Still, and maybe because of that) most Malaysians share a sense of isolation, of emptiness, of transiency with the overseas Chinese in Indonesia. Why so? The overseas Chinese in South-east Asia, more often than not, is the target of suspicion and sometimes very blatant discrimination, hostility, and suspicion. The Overseas Chinese in Malaysia and Indonesia are made to feel like second-class citizens, if they are lucky enough to be citizens at all.

Why are the Chinese made to feel so unwelcome in parts of South-east Asia? The roots of this conflict are few but deep. The Malays are devout Muslims. Most Chinese, on the other hand, are Christians or Buddhists. The Malay language is dissimilar to the Chinese; the languages and traditions are also very different. In other words, we are three distinctively different peoples seemingly stuck with each other. Many Malays have been agitating for a Muslim Malay nation. Appreciation of the differences between the two races is always harped at, but yet to be attained.

Waiting for racial harmony to be achieved seems more futile than waiting for Godot. Many Malaysians still vividly recall a period known as the Emergency. Between 1957 and 1963, Malaysia was in a "state of emergency" as Communists threatened to take over the country. Although most of these Communists were Chinese, they did not have much support from Chinese-Malaysians, and the war was all but won in the first two years. But the misunderstanding, distrust and hostility still remain.

Indonesia also had its own Communist threat in the 1960s, and the Chinese there are also victims of the hostile feelings that still remain, even though that threat was from the Soviets. Many Malays do not trust the Chinese, fearing they may still hold allegiance to now-Communist China. That is why you won't find a Chinese in the air force - you never know where they might land.

What does it mean to be an overseas Chinese in most of South-east Asia? It means always having to watch what you say and what you do. It means growing up with the knowledge that this might be a land of opportunity, but not for you. It means, as a child, aspirations of one day becoming Prime Minister never got far, for it is constitutionally impossible for a Chinese to be one. It means finding for yourself is doubly hard since privileged treatment such as free education overseas and free land is reserved for Malays - you didn't come here first, that's why. It means having hate-filled eyes locked on you for having worked too hard, become too successful despite the obstacles. It means having your economic success slowly, gradually legislated away from you through quotas and limits. It means not buying what you want to buy, not because you can't afford it, but because some people might not be too happy about it. For those lucky enough to have one, it's holding on to your passport for dear life, for once lost, it might be light years before you get another one. It occasionally means thinking twice before overrating someone's car, just in case he might be Malay and does not take too kindly to a Chinese doing that. As trivial as it may seem to some, it also means thinking when the day for your dog will be poisoned or intentionally run over, for dogs are not in the same parts. That's what it means to me - day to day survival of the human spirit.

They do not have to make us disappear from the face of the earth. It is enough to crush the strong Chinese will to persevere and overcome, to set straight the naive belief in fair play and mutual respect.

How long can one keep on loving that which has rejected one? How long can one pretend to belong to a country which would sooner send us back to where we came from? An inevitable consequence of this tension has been the growing migration of the wealthy and well-educated Chinese to friendlier Western shores, a cash and brain drain. This only feeds fuel to the fire for hatemongers, who view this as proof that we are a people without any allegiance.

The tragedy of this is that those Chinese who are left behind are those who are least well off and least able to fend for themselves against increased bigotry and discrimination. They will be the ones truly leading "lives of quiet desperation." Caught in a twilight zone of hopelessness and despair, people without a country, without a future.

Disney Returns With Contemporary Classic

By Lon Ross and Faith Hickey

Charles Dicken's Oliver Twist comes to the big screen as a lovable orange kitten, in Walt Disney's 27th full length Animated film, "Oliver and Company." New York is the setting for an array of misfit mutts and a clever kitten named Oliver. The animation was in the classic Walt Disney style, combined with the contemporary vocal talents of actor Joey Lawrence, Grammy Award winner Huey Lewis, Ruth Pointer and Bette Midler. Additional voices included Richard Mulligan, Ronocy Lee Brown, Sheryl Lee Ralph, and Dom DeLuise.

As well as singing, Billy Joel makes his acting debut of the street smart canine, "Dodger." An interesting note, he got the part by auditioning over the phone, from a distance of 3000 miles. Also making a debut is Cheech Marin. As he says, "This is the first movie that my kids can watch."

The Waterboys' "Fishermaan's Blues" Is No Mirage

By Christina Komeshian
Staff Reporter

Blend together Robbie Robertson and Van Morrison and you've got "The Waterboys", an Irish folk rock band. Their new album, "Fishermaan's Blues" is no disappointment. Their first single, "Fishermaan's Blues" is beautiful. The various instruments blend together to achieve a country sound over the Irish countryside. Another track, "World Fares", bears the name of their ex-band member. Carl Wallinger's group (remember "Ship of Fools")? Anyway, this song is crowned with musical activity thanks to instruments such as the guitar, tambourine, cajon, gas, trumpet, piano, Fuzz mandolin, diddles, and drums. The song is definitely a step beyond American acoustic sounds because of the ethnicity and flavor of the music. I wish "Sherwood Tree", written by Van Morrison was better than it is. is good visual design and what is not. There are a number of riders to follow. Keep it simple, use overheads as outlines of basic points, keep text to a minimum, and the like. The MCFE teams go off to their employers enhanced by this knowledge.

According to Marilyn Bachelder, MCFE's Director, companies expect dazzling presentations nowadays. Whether producing the presentation individually or within the fund support of a large corporate department, in order to articulate his or her ideas, a person must understand media, and not just in terms of broad or narrow uses. Ten years ago, an audiovisual presentation meant a slide show; now the use of computers is much more prevalent. At Babson, students learn to use Harvard Graphics, but this actually minimizes the use of Media Services. In order to produce their own materials, those of the software designers should take advantage of the expertise of Richard Wilson and the rest of the staff in Media Services. They should go beyond Harvard Graphics. Ms. Bachelder cites as an example a MCFE tea currently involved in producing a video about the MCFE program itself. The purpose of this video, to be produced with the express use of Media Services is to generate buzz and increase the audience of the MCFE program. It is to be a professional-quality presentation with wide appeal. With the support of Media Services, it is sure to be all this and more.

Media Makes The Manager

By Christopher Boyd
Contributing Writer

'Tis the season. Christmas? No, finals. As the fall semester winds to a close, Babson brains begin to ponder how to maximize the impact of those final reports and presentations. What better way than to make use of Media Services? Located on the second floor of the Harkness complex, Media Services offers media equipment, a graphics lab, preview rooms, and more, all geared to provide assistance in the design and production of presentation visuals.

According to Richard Wilson, Assistant Manager of Media Services, professors react favorably to the use of Media's products. A professional-quality presentation shows the professor that the student has planned ahead and has put in the time and effort it takes to get those top grades. Yet, using visuals is actually one of the easiest things a student can do to improve a grade. Media Services is an excellent resource of high-quality color laser printer output, and offers slides and video preparation as well.

The larger purpose of Media Services is to help students learn how to make the best use of audio-visual media for presentations they will have to make later on in their careers. There are numerous "real world" applications: sales and marketing, product development and introduction, training, finance, and stockholders' meetings are examples. Media services are so important that many firms have their own in-house corporate media departments. For those that do not, there are production houses whose sole purpose is to support the need for audiovisual work. The manager who can communicate knowledgeably and effectively with these services and who can tell when a visual aid is good or bad is the manager who ends up with the best presentations.

Media Services' function is to support the students and faculty at Babson, but its efforts carry over into the business community as well, via the MCFE program - the Management Consulting Field Experience. Early in each semester, media services conducts a workshop which is designed to teach MCFE team members what

GRAD CELEBRITY
SPORTSMAN

By S. White
Can you correctly identify the Grad Celebrity Sportman of the week sports fans?

It is a clear and crisply cold November morning, but just barely. A new dawn has just begun to penetrate the dim remnants of deep night, and peering through the surrounding dark and swirling pea-soup I can see five feet in front of the boat to where a white mist rises slowly and silently off the water into the chill ocean air.

The last time I was awake this early it was to escape an incogisderate house fire, and I almost didn't get up even then. At least this time it isn't snowing and I have my pants.

So far, so good.

I am here duck hunting the great Atlantic Flyway with Ernest Hemingway's son Jack this morning. No one has scared either Bumby in a long time, and he hasn't tasted pigeon since Paris and the days of the Moveable Feast. But tonight with any luck at all it will be my particular, some say peculiar, culinary specialty, Duck Stroganoff. With me at the skillet handle we have a man wrong. Arig grips on a duck hunting shotgun however, our prospects for the day stand to take on entirely different dimensions.

We've been blowing pristine white smoke rings for some time now. Floating them up, fat and round against the grey draped sky.

Always bring cheap cigars on hunting and fishing expeditions, they are unsurpassed for passing the hours of waiting that punctuate the day between minutes of action, and to wonders in promoting male bonding. Two guys can't help but grow closer together when they share that much bad taste and inevitable resultant spitting. Guys have liked to spit in the woods since time immemorial.

In the back of my ring-inside-the-ring trick Jack's Labrador retriever Josie starts rocking the boat, throwing my aim off and creating a totally different, and not too bad trick of her own. A moment later we hear the birds coming. Exchanging my cigar for a gun I notice that the night has gone and that we are safe for a shot. We stand, tensed and ready, guns poised aloft in anticipation. No birds! I'll be damned if I can see one! I can sure hear them... wings sizzling through the still air, others whirring their defiance of gravity, breaking the frosty morning silence. Nothing! The camera man and sound guy are a study in action, both intently filming and sounding or whatever, but what? Jack, of course! Are my glasses on? Yes, but I still see nada! The sound is so close I can hear the wind whistling through trailing pinfeathers! But there are no birds to be seen. I've heard of Duck Fever, but Duck Fever? I decide to execute a 360 degree horizon scan, no mean feet in a rowboat half full of coaxial cable. I pivot cleanly, my shining gun barrel cutting a smooth arcing path through the air. CLONGGG!!! Duck bead meets tubular steel! There is an unconscious duck in the bottom of the boat. Josie doesn't know what to make of it, I think she feels cheery because she didn't have to swim for it. The flock passes quickly over and is gone, knocking the sound guy's hat into the water, and then all is absolutely quiet again. I have to say that this will call for some very creative film editing. We sit waiting quietly. The cigars don't get lit, you can tell the weather is getting serious now. But it isn't me. The brightening mist that still hovers over the water around us in impenetrable gobs reminds me of an old movie where they had Angels sitting on puffy clouds that looked just like this. The day is so still, I don't think there is a duck for ten miles.

Wait! I believe we hear some action! There's a strange splashing, surging sound in the water off to our right. And a faint sort of haunting noise with it, and its coming closer.

Our weapons at the ready we zero in on the patch beyond the mist where the sounds emanate and wait.

Looking down my gun barrel I tip my ear toward the mysterious splashing sound, I can't really do a good job of it, but I try. I see a large dark spot and the sound grows in volume. The loping of a large waterfowl. I don't have much choice. In search of the next best shot. After a few moments the sound has grown and it becomes harder to hear the sound of the shotgun. The sight of a large brown shape that is 45 yards away in the opposite direction.

The shot is fired. Two large ducks rise overhead and fly off into the distance to the left. I turn to see the sound guy, Josie and Jack all looking rather pleased with themselves. The sound guy was grinning ear to ear, the two dogs were wagging and Josie had tears in her eyes. Jack was grinning ear to ear, the two dogs were wagging and Josie had tears in her eyes.

If you had $6000 to spend on graduate student events, what would you do with it? If you have any ideas, fill them in below and mail them to any GSA representative.

I would spend the $6000 on:

GRADS OUTPOWER FACULTY IN BASKETBALL 19-1

Although the sun shone brightly on that fateful Tuesday before Turkey Day, there was not even a glimmer of hope for the faculty as they fell in defeat to the students in this semester's soccer challenge. The student victors kept the game close, at least for the first 60 seconds. The dam broke for the faculty when the students unleashed their secret weapon, the Peruvian Pele (Claudia Helguero). With her eyes closed, Claudia stunned the crowd and the faculty with a punishing penalty kick. Nineteen goals later, the students let a goal slip by to give the distraught faculty a morale booster. It was clear from the onset that the faculty knew they were outmatched. Unable to field a team internally, the faculty resorted to outside (professional?) recruits to fill the many gaps. Notably absent this year were Dean Tom Moore and Prof. John Marthinsen and Robert Eng. While the excuses ranged from recurring war ailments to being "out of town," speculation has it that the real reason was simply to get the faculty reacquainted with spring. Only time, healing and much practice will tell. Until then, aloha.

The Beavers Remain Hot on the Ice

Win streak at 7 games

By Rob "The Eye" Silver
Sports Editor

The Babson hockey team downed UMass Boston 3-1 this past Tuesday, to raise their winning streak to seven, and their record to 8-1.

Back to last week: Westfield State was in town and they did not have a pleasant stay. Goalie Joe Capprini, 23 saves, recorded his first shutout of the season, fourth of his career, as Babson destroyed WS 10-0. The most surprising performance was turned in by first-time starter, Todd Johnson. Todd racked up four assists along with a goal in his college debut. Jeff Stewards and Greg Malateska each had a pair of goals. John Herlihy was credited with the winning score. Babson dominated every aspect of the game and managed 72 shots on net.

Even Saturday, the Polar Bears of Bowdoin invaded the Babson Rec Center. Bowdoin sported a 1-0 record coming in and left sporting a record of 1-1 after being defeated 4-1 by the Beavers.

Although it was Thanksgiving weekend, the game was heavily attended. Latecomers found themselves parking on Route 155. I was a little upset about that.

Ron Beran got the scoring started midway through the opening period, as he scored his 9th goal of the season. At the end of one period Baby 1, Bowdoin 0.

Stewards, who missed a golden opportunity early in the second period, would redeem himself as he broke in alone on the Bowdoin goalie, shifted to his left, and slid the puck home to make the score 2-0. The period would end with a 2-0 score until the final period.

Bowdoin would cut the margin to one as Capprini allowed his only goal while turning away 35 shots.

Sean Rogers and John Herlihy managed a goal apiece to make the final score 4-1 against rival Bowdoin.

This past Tuesday, the UMass Becons faced off against the red-hot Beavers. The Beavers have had their troubles in the past with the Becons. But, the Beavers would turn in another solid performance as they disposed of UMass 3-1. Babson managed one goal in each period. The first score was by Jon Creamer as he recorded his first goal of the season. Mark Allen would get the second goal, his seventh of the year. The Beavers would cut the lead in half and by the end of the second period, Babson led 3-1. Jamie Rice would ice the victory as he registered a quick score, just 27 seconds into the final period to make the final result 4-1. Babson hosts UConn tonight at 7:00pm and Saturday, Hobart in town, gametime for that one is 3:30pm.

Puck Off: Mark Allen leads the team in points with 16......Captain Ron Beran already has 9 goals......Jamie Rice's 10 assists lead the team in that department......The Beavers have scored on 27% of their power plays while killing off 91% of their opponents......Allen has three power-play goals......Goalie Joe Capprini has been outstanding in net and currently sports a 1.52 goals against average and a .944 save percentage......Bowdoin has yet to score a shorthanded goal......Sean Rogers is atop the team in penalty minutes with 10......Babson is averaging 4.24 goals per game.

Captain Ron Beran (4), tries to avoid a UMass defender. Babson beat the Becons 3-1, to record their seventh straight win and raise their record to 8-1.

Let's get the bad news over with right away. EYE lost. O.K. Are you happy? EYE know that EYE let a lot of my fans down. EYE'm sorry. Dad. It was bad luck. The winner was the defending champs from Pietz 31. They win the $20 prize compliments of the Free Press. The team won in impressive fashion, sporting a 10-3 record. They'll be back this week, EYE hope. EYE want them to EYE's game and make you a better fan, literally. Also sporting in fine records in the November 20 action, Free Press News at 9-4. Tower of Power 9-4. Frank Millerick 8-5. McCollough A-4 8-5. "The Eye" 7-6 (my fifth straight week above .500), ZBB 7-6, and Pietz 26-7-6. As you can see it was a great week for everyone except my neighbors in the Canfield A-Dungeon (Marc Freedman and Rich Goldberg) as they went 4-9. EYE'm not sure who will be entering the Showdown this week, so EYE can not give my team by team personal preview. Instead EYE'll talk about the past Presidential election. Just kidding, EYE lost a lot of money on that election. It wasn't in campaign donations either. EYE had the Duke at 5-1 odds and the rest was history.

EYE'LL go through my top three picks and let you know how a pro handicaps a game. EYE'LL title this part, "Inside the Mind of The Eye."

New England is favored by 3.5 over Seattle. NE has covered the points for six straight weeks, make it seven after Sunday. Seattle will commit 5 turnovers, 3 interceptions and 2 fumbles. Final Score, Pats 31 Seattle 13. Bet: The car.

San Diego -1.5 against Cincinnati. Why? EYE'LL say everyone will be leaning towards Cincy because they beat the Bills last week, and they are at home again. San Diego on the other hand, on their home turf, was crushed by San Francisco. E sunny and Ickey Woods are great. Malone and Vlasic are terrible. All factors point towards Cincy, therefore EYE take San Diego. They could possibly win the game outright. Bet: The House.

Miami +1.5 against Indy. Miami was at home two weeks back against the Pats, and Miami was favored by 2.5. Now they face Indy at home, and they are getting points. If they played this game two weeks ago, Miami would have been favored by 3.5. Bet: Miami.

Miami +1.5 against Indy. Miami will keep the Patriot's playoff hopes alive as they win 27-21. Bet: $451.34. Also try Atlanta, Minnesota, and Phoenix.

Remember that next week will be the last installment of the Handicapping Showdown. Please, no tears. EYE'd like to receive lots of entries for next week's contest. Call me at 4114. There is the prize of $20 for the winner. There are no financial obligations unless you want some. EYE do know of a few entrants for this week. John and Neil, the Park Manor Central Caretakers, are back in the action. Canfield A-Dungeon wants to try again. From Pietz 25, Lori Freedman. The Free Press Production Department will be represented by Dudley and Mike. Those are the only ones as of this time. Wait, this newsflash just came in; George Reck will be in this week. Now we can all sleep better tonight.
