On the Olin Tragedy

The following email was sent out on that Monday morning from Olin's President:

To Our Members of the Olin Community,

I am deeply saddened to report that one of our students was involved in a motorcycle accident in Doer, MA last night. As a result, Matthew Bosow is in critical condition in the hospital. (Rachel Nash, a first-year student from California, was also involved in the accident.)

Our deepest sympathies are with the families and friends of the students.

I have no doubt that our close-knit community will show great concern and support to everyone in this community at this difficult time.

This news was announced to students late last night by the resident halls of Red Chute, Olin of Student Life. Notification of medical services will be provided as details become available.

After consultation we have decided forward with this morning's meeting on an attendance (late)-optimal basis. Students will need to have their friends or with conscience.

Babson Entertainment Initiative

Babson Entertainment Initiative (BEI) will launch its first Friday Night Live in the pub this Friday, September 14th. Partnering with SOA and Berklee School of Music. BEI will showcase different up and coming bands from Berklee EVERY FRIDAY NIGHT IN THE PUB. In an effort to promote the musicians at Berklee, BEI will also be holding an audition for bands banding as well. If selected, these students from Berklee will be booked side by side with Berklee bands, a chance to show off their talent outside of the campus. IBE has existed for over five years, but has recently made a huge surge forward into the heart of the campus entertainment scene. Last year, BEI brought the campus its very first entertainment festival, which showcased a film festival, fashion show, media and entertainment conference, and Hypnotist Dance show. On top of its annual festival, BEI intends this year to bring live music to the pub every Friday night, while also booking tremendously successful businespeople in the entertainment industry. Rumors of BEA COE Robert Remus and Hip Hop Producer Leslie Ryan have been heard throughout the campus.

To find out more about Friday Night Live, BEI or how to get involved, visit Jamie Kent at jkent1@babson.edu.

Habitat Volunteers Undertake Fundraising Goal of $75-100K for Charity

Lauryne Sherman Staff Writer

Tuesday September 11th marked the kickoff meeting for the Habitat for Humanity club. With over forty students in attendance, the back of the classroom quickly became standing-room only. Club leaders showcased all of their plans for the coming year, which included everything from running the annual haunted house in publishers to actually running in sponsored 5k races throughout the year.

For those of you who aren’t familiar with Habitat, it’s an international organization that’s goal is to eliminate poverty housing and homelessness around the world. At a very basic level, Habitat, builds and rehabilitates simple homes with the help of the homeowner’s, and Babson Emerging Markets Club (BEM) aims to teach its members “how to better understand the emergence of developing economies and potential opportunities”. To a student myself — I am concentrating in Development Economics — I think it’s great! Why? Well, it is generally accepted by development economists that foreign direct investment (FDI) holds developing economies that would other wise have no way of escaping poverty. When one thinks about countries that are developing, the United States of America, Canada, most of western Europe and Australia can easily be excluded. Well then, a simple arithmetic would show us that all of the remaining countries in the world would be on the developing path or in the position to become developed. To my chagrin, this is where BEM becomes selective.

I joined BEM’s facebook group in hopes of finding an entrepreneurial community open to discussing business opportunities within emerging economies. The first thing that I noticed when I joined the group was that it is a picture of the entire world highlighting the world’s definition of

Capital Comfort for Babson Beds

Nicolle Smith

Before December 2006, Morgan Smith was unhappy. This unhappiness was caused by a simple factor: those uncomfortable green dorm beds and as a freshman at Babson, Morgan was not willing to live with this mattress for the next four years. Like the entrepreneur that Babson encourages us to be, Morgan didn’t just complain about this; he took action and sought Capital Comfort, or Beds, with the collaboration of VanGuard Mattress Inc., was won.

During the break between fall and spring semester, Morgan met with the owners of VanGuard Mattress Inc. of Brea, California, a family company, to specially design mattress pads for the mattresses that college-specifically Babson-provided. VanGuard had never before manufactured mattress pads of this nature, however while looking at their products the team decided that they could create these pads from parts that Vanguard typically adds to its mattresses. Using the dimensions of the bed while considering other features that Morgan, as a college student, would appreciate three types of mattress pads were created. Each has the following features according to the company’s website at www.babsonbeds.com:

- Economical: 1/2.5 Density Super Soft Foam, 1 oz. Dacron Fiber, 1 2/1.5 Density Regular Firm Foam, Channel Quilt/Non-Skid Back, “Ashley Blue”, Elastic Strap at All Four Corners, Hypo-Allergenic, Bacteria and dust mite resistant, Very Comfy Luxurious: White Stretch Knit Cover “Curves”, Non-Skid Backing, 2”, 5 lb. Memory Foam, Elastic Strap at All Four Corners, Prevents Bacterial Growth, Hypo-Allergenic, Body Conforming, Prevents Localized Pressure and Eases Circulation, Even Distribution of Weight, Reduced Pressure Points, High Comfort triot vs. Chargers), soccer games (Wednesday the 12th is Mexico Vs. Brazil), and other events, hosted at the stadium in Boston.

The club also has plans in October to host the annual Halloween Haunted House in Public Library and Pub Night at Roger’s Pub in Park Manor Central. Habitat members intend to host “Homelessness Awareness Week” at Babson in November, and plan to race as a sponsored team in the Cruickshank race later this year.

An effort to give back before building even begins, the club expects to host Coaching for Leadership programs and will participate in Harvard Square Meals, a program that feeds the homeless.

So what is all the fundraising and spring break, there will be a week-long home-building trip that club members have the opportunity to take part in. In previous years, the trips have been to Mexico and Louisiana.

The fundraising that takes place all year will be supplemented by Babson, and all the participants who do their fundraising will be allowed to go for free.

Istwan Liao, who won with Habitat to Louisiana last year, described the experience as, “bringing joy to all of the families who lost their homes” and said, “to know that you can have such a powerful impact on somebody’s life is just such an incredible experience.” All of the people who talked about their experiences on the trip expressed that it was immeasurably life-changing. Those who attended the Mexico trip said that they appreciated the hard work and subsequent relaxation that accompanied the experience of cultural immersion.

Babson’s Habitat leaders all emphasized that they would like feedback and ideas for fundraisers, and of course as many dedicated volunteers as possible. If you are interested in participating or becoming a part of Habitat, you can contact Tiffany Caron at TCaron18@Babson.edu or Istwan Liao at IIiao18@Babson.edu.

Level, Open Cell Structure, Improves Sleep Quality

Elite: Channel Quilt/Non-Skid Back, 2” Latex + Quilt Cover “Sierra”, Overall R-Value: Thickness Approx. 3 1/2 “. Elastic Strap at All Four Corners, Maximizes Breathability, Hypo-Allergenic, Dust Mite Resistant, Environmentally Friendly, Natural Orthopedic Support, Superior Pressure Equalization, Dynamically conforms to your body, Every Movement, Never Needs Turning, Will not Lump, Sag or Buckle

According to the website: “Unlike all other pads, the Capital Comfort mattress pads cover the entire length of the bed, provide four elastic straps to attach the pad to the mattress, and a non-skid backing to ensure the pad does not slide off the bed, which previously was a common occurrence. VanGuard Mattress Corp. was able to integrate these features into the three current versions of their pillow pads. Originally designed for queen and king beds, these three pads provided the utmost comfort for those who wanted to improve their sleep without buying a whole new mattress. The concept was simple enough, yet no one had thought of shrinking a king/queen size luxurious mattress pillow pad into a college sized Extra-Long Twin.”

Corporations have previously mistreated the college consumer’s needs, but this disrespect stops with Capital Comfort.”

With the website up before Capital Comfort was on campus, the first sales came from the internet. Morgan talked about his first sales: “my first sales were international, to students coming to Babson from Sweden and other countries, a feat that would excite any business. In order to cut costs for students, Morgan shipped a number of pre-made mattress pads to Babson in time for Freshman Orientation. Morgan encountered issues in the production phase trying to ship the mattress pads from California to Babson and then again with storage, “but Morgan’s been great! Especially Sandy Siliciano and facilities, they helped a lot,” shared Smith.

Morgan shared a story of two freshmen who swore not to buy mattress pads when visiting the Capital Comfort table during orientation. Smith told them that when they get back to their rooms, lay on their beds and get up, their next move would be to come back to Capital Comfort to buy a mattress pad. Sure enough he saw the students later that day. He shares he’d got a great customer feedback to the point that many of the people that buy them come back later and tell him they could sell them for him. “I’ve been able to hire employees to work in the store front and also at other schools,” says Smith, rather excited about the success of this business. Along with Babson, Capital Comfort has representatives at Yale, Stanford, University of South California, and Oxford.

consider all of the potential in Africa. Focusing on a few countries is fine and dandy, but BEM must acknowledge that Africa is not hopeless; there are opportunities and smart entrepreneurs will take risks to seek returns. In an article in the January 25, 2007 issue of The Economist, the International Telecommunication Union found that in the sub-Saharan country of Gabon, cell phone usage increased from 10% to over 45% from 2000 to 2006. In Kenya, it increased from 0% to over 10% of the population. These advances are happening because of the opportunities given to these African nations by entrepreneurs willing to take on risky propositions.

The Babson Emerging Markets Club has the right to focus their attention on core emerging countries. With all the press surrounding the growth of China, India, and Bangladesh, I see no argument against focusing on countries that are currently doing really well. With that said, I firmly believe that BEM should also focus their attention on markets, not growing at the pace of China, but the potential to grow and develop. Twenty years ago no one would have ever imagined that China would become the fastest growing economy. Over the years, FDI has helped China and the same can be said about Africa. Currently our perception is that Africa will never get out of poverty. If there’s anything that China has taught us, it is that the seemingly impossible, is in fact, possible. To BEM, don’t let Africa pass you by; this is Babson College and Innovation is Our Tradition.

Dining Out In-Tech Style

Aishwarya Prashanth

Technology has been a part of our lives ever since the Industrial Revolution. The past two decades, especially, have witnessed technology’s entry into everyday life. From iPods to cell phones, technology has changed the way we travel, relax, and work. Now technology is influencing our lives.

Michael Mack decided to use the very same technology in the culinary world and thus, ’s Baggers (yes, it starts with an apostrophe) was born. ’s Baggers is a multi-story restaurant in the small town of Nuremberg, Germany. This little restaurant has the honors of being the first of its kind that offers a fully-mechanized ordering and service system.

So how exactly does this system work? Each table at the restaurant is equipped with touch screens. This allows customers to place their orders directly without the need of service. The touch screens also have their own ATM-like machines, which allow customers to pay directly through their credit cards.

The orders are then transmitted to the kitchen and passed through a central computer system. This computer system keeps track of orders and also helps catalogue available ingredients and dishes. This system also relays the expected waiting time for food and drinks to customers waiting at their tables and lets them know when their orders are ready.

Each table at the restaurant is connected to the kitchen through an elaborate gravity-fed rail system, strongly resembling mini-roller coasters as they descend from the kitchen and connect to the tables below. Except for the occasional time when the kitchen staff (yes they still need people to cook) have to prod the orders down the rail system with wooden sticks, this delivery system is fairly well-organized. Each item is color-coded with the corresponding color on the touch-screen, so there is no confusion with the orders.

This fully-automated service has freed ’s Baggers of many of the problems plaguing other restaurants and has effectively reduced inefficiency, cost, and slow service. Germany, a well-known “wasteland” when it comes to service, will benefit greatly from this type of service. Currently, Michael Mack, ’s Baggers’ founder, is trying to gain protection rights for his patented rail system internationally so that he can license to other restaurants around the world.

The very notion of this eccentric restaurant is strong enough to make many customers think of it as a child’s adventure world and every tech lover’s dream. It is truly fascinating to watch this restaurant at work. Its efficiency and order has made many customers liken ’s Baggers to a post office.

However, not everyone is admiring of ’s Baggers use of technology. Many people feel that using technology in the restaurant industry, in such a way, has ruined the magic and warmth that has always been a part of dining out, rendering it cold, clinical, and dare we say mechanical? One observer of ’s Baggers was more expressive and said its rail system resembled the one used by farms to feed pigs.

Love it or hate it, ’s Baggers novel dining experience has changed things forever. Eating out will never be the same!

Go to Ghana in January

Nancie Smith

On Wednesday night at 8:00PM, Dean Hanno held an information session for what sounds like, and most likely will be, an amazing opportunity. That is, a two week trip to Ghana with other Babson students, accompanied by Dean Hanno and Professor Stephen Deets, for the cultural and educational experience of a lifetime.

Dean Hanno began the session by explaining how he had come upon the trip many years ago. A call from a nursing professor who had been working with a healthcare clinic in Ghana, past years had asked Dean Hanno to look into hosting a business seminar in the city for the Ghanaians. Upon arrival, Dean Hanno was unexpectedly asked to give a speech presenting his plan for the classes. Although the official language of Ghana is English, a translator was present to translate the speech Dean Hanno gave shortly after stepping off the plane. Dean Hanno explained to the crowd that one main reason for the trip would be to expose his students to different cultures, more so than it would be beneficial for the Ghanaians.

In the first trip, Dean Hanno brought about a dozen students, and they packed up old computers to ship over with them. While they stayed at a youth in the city, they set up computer centers—this took a full week. Reminded of the previous experience, many of the students learned of the obstacles the first team in Ghana dealt with. They had to learn to rewire, find and fix fuses for the installation of the computers, where tables and chairs were not available to work on. Several tables with local craftsmen for the computers to sit upon. Also high school students in the same region each team member felt afterwards as they watched a line of over half a mile-long waiting to use the computers with a fifteen minute time cap.

In 2002, on the second trip, the Amherst group began to train Ghanaians to teach even more how to use the computers, and the Amherst team had created a manual that is still used in the trips. Every year, something else is added to the program. Last January 28, faculty members from Amherst, including Professor Deets of Babson, accompanied the Dean. On that trip, the program was taken to high schools during the day where teams of undergraduates, graduates, and faculty and alumni were assigned to different schools. By the end of the high school program, students were participating in a business plan competition.

Now on his eighth trip, Dean Hanno is looking to introduce Babson students to this experience. He cautions students that this is a work-intensive trip, with a busy schedule and definitely not pluck living conditions. Students will be staying in a church in the city, in which they will be working (and having running water most of the time, the possibility of illness, and foods that were just caught from outside). Some entrees include the fish from the harbor a short distance from the church and the chickens that can be seen running around outside on the streets. However, for those willing to live under these conditions, the Dean assures that this trip will be an experience not to be forgotten. Along with the class that will be taught by the Babson students, the group will also visit natural and historical landmarks, such as the national rainforest where several of the craftspeople live.

The trip will count as a three-credit course for graduate students and four-credit course for undergraduates. Whether the credit is an advanced liberal art credit or a general business credit is to be determined by the project that the students choose to complete after returning.

The tentative dates for this trip are from January 25 to February 12, depending upon airfare and the like. The deadline for applications is September 21, 2007. I encourage all, as does Dean Hanno, “If you’re looking for a unique experience and you think you may have a profound impact on your life, you owe it to yourself to find out more.”

Chicken Soup for the Soul

Chuck Broomfield

The opening weekend of the NFL campaign has recently kicked off, but the only thing on my mind for this weekend is the highly anticipated series at Fenway between the Red Sox and Yankees. As much as every Sox-Yanks series is highly important, this series is making me lose sleep for a couple of reasons. One is that the Sox have dropped the last six out of seven to the Bronx Bombers. And opening up for the Sox, is the recently cold Diceike Matsuzaka, who has an ERA of almost seven against the Yankees in three starts, and he hasn’t fared any better against anyone else in the past month. Second, the Yankees have been red-hot since the All Star Break, obtaining a 42-20 record since the Midsummer Classic.

The Red Sox, who still have the best record in baseball, best pitching, and 2nd best defense, still haven’t made things easy on themselves or for the Fenway Faithful. This is due to inexperience of a few players like the famous $75 million dollar man, J.D. Drew, and to the recent struggles of pitchers who have come through countless times this season (Wakefield, Matsuzaka, and Okajima). But despite the abysmal events of the Mas- sacre Part II last year, and the recent resurgence of the Empire, I still have enough optimism in my soul to believe the Sox will thrive in what is arguably regarded as the most important series of the year for both teams.

In watching the Devil Rays series, I began to see again, the magic that Red Sox have shown over the past few years. After a rough 1-0 loss on Monday to the phenomen- onal Scott Kazmir, the Sox displayed their comeback magic that has seemed absent all season. On September 11th, I saw the magic first hand as the Sox surged ahead, after being down to the Rays 16-10. The next night brought 9th inning drama, which was capped by a two-run shot by the ever-so-clutch David Ortiz, a familiar sight to fans of Red Sox Nation. Witnessing the homerun, I immediately turned my still cold mind to the series ahead.

Friday night presents the pitching match-up of Diceike Matsuzaka vs. Andy Pettitte. As much as Dice-K has been struggling recently, I still have faith in the man who we paid over $100 million dollars for to pitch in games where the spotlight shines brightest. He’s simply too good of a pitcher to completely go on a non-stop free fall. Saturday brings debatably the best pitching match-up of the year when Josh Beckett faces off against Taiwanese super- star Chien-Mien Wang. Something tells me that the winner of this game will have momentum for the rest of the series, and possibly for the remainder of the season.

Sunday brings a match-up of old workhorses when Curt Schilling faces off against former Sox ace and current Sox nemesis Roger Clemens, who will make his first start against his former team since the 2003 cam- paign. I’m sure many of the boo-birds of the Nation will eagerly await the return of The Rocket to Fenway Park, because I know so. So as I eagerly await this series between the Nation and the Empire with the combined anticipation of the Super Bowl and a root canal, I re- mind myself just like every other Sox fan that this sea- son is different and that we will take the American League East for the first time since 1995. I mean, 2004 happened didn’t it? And if that isn’t consoling enough, I think back to one magic number, 11.

A Pilot Preview: Private Practice

Amanda Medin
Free Press TV Consultant

Private Practice (Wednesdays at 8:00, 902, ABC) - To those who watch Grey's Anatomy, this pilot will feel incredibly similar to last season's penultimate episode in which Addison visits a friend in Los Angeles. What you may not have known then was that was a backdoor pilot to test how successful the premise for Addison's spin-off would be. Even though the response was lukewarm and the reviews were extremely negative, ABC and Glee producers were ahead with the concept anyway, leading to this burst of mediocrity. Aside from some minor cast changes, the pilot is set up exactly like it was established previously, with all the adults working together in their own specialty, and even a wellness clinic, while struggling to manage their romantic lives. Despite an incredibly strong cast, the writing just doesn't click like it did in early Grey's. While it can be partly blamed on a tired concept (medical procedures, with everything to separate it from any other show, the biggest problem was the overall disconnect to the characters). Here we are as an audience, thrown into the middle of the story, and not really given a reason or particular like or care about any of the storytellers. The show has to show you the show any favors, and if anything bring Addison down from her typical rank of most awesome character to whininess. Between complaint, informing the others of her presence, complaining about her downgrade from a full staff and OR to one room and a midwife, or to Sam about not fitting in, she had no time to be the funny and charming Addison we've come to love. If that Addison doesn't come back soon, there really won't be any reason to watch the show. As for the feel, the dialogue still sounds like an episode of Grey's Anatomy, but midwifery has replaced seriously as the overused word of the Grace. Music is from typical Grey's players like Brandi Carlisle, KT Tunstall, and Mat Kearney, among others. Unfortunately I don't see this show getting past the weak premise, and I hope Shonda brings Addison back to Seattle one time EVER and Private Practice fails.

Season Spotlight

Amanda Medin
Free Press TV Consultant

Friday Night Lights (Fridays, 9:00, NBC) - I resisted this show. I resisted for a long time. I did not care about football, and I certainly did not care about small towns obsessed with football. But more and more critics raved at it, begging everyone in sight to join me in my endeavor. I thought the show was a sports movie. Then, I thought it was a gritty football soap opera. Then, a melodrama. By the end, I think I settled on being a family drama. But, really, it's all of them.

One of the major selling points of the show in the way it's made. It's shot in a documentary style, but they take the viewer feel one step further. They film on location with natural lighting, and the actors don't rehearse, instead being encouraged to improvise as needed. Two eras focus on specific actors and another camera sort of in its own way, looking for interesting moments to capture. The dialogue is very naturalistic. It all feels real because it is, in some sense. It's as if the characters are peeping in on these characters' lives.

There are certain scenes in this show that are just jarring, the kind that completely grab you and make you focus. They're so utterly visceral, I couldn't believe I was watching network television.

What I love about this show is that it doesn't have to try very hard to convey the gamut of human emotion. It just shows it. I look forward to happening in Dillon, with no frills maybe some accompanying Explosions in the Sky, but it's just a backdrop).

Every episode is perfectly consist- ent in its storytelling, yet what transpires on the screen can elicit varied reactions, which make you smile two scenes before breaking your heart. I'll call a knot in your stomach, and make you laugh. It's not edited to the same beats as a regular television show, which means often feels like a short story cold in punctuation scene.

That's another one of its strengths really. While it has continuing narrative of a serial drama, each epi- sodes very closely revolves around a specific conflict that is introduced and resolved in the same episode, so at least you get some sort of closure every week. Of course, it also has a tendency to just stop the episode on a happy ending just to Enforce, leaving you screaming for more. It has a way of getting to you, somehow.

The characters are incredibly easy to catch on to once you start watching. I didn't like most of them in the beginning; they were stubborn and small-minded and stupid, but by the end I found myself loving them all, unexpectedly. Sometimes the show will get you to know these characters and you'll think that's the way they are. It lets you see them making the hard choices and feeling the pain they are. Also, Coach and Mrs. Coach are the best married couple on television. They are amazing. This means never needs to stop referring to himself in the third person, Sosack has a heart of gold, Riggins is just misunderstood, Street has a great heart, and Newsome is a heart of arc. Landry is better than I gave him credit for in the beginning. Tyrus thinks the town's obsession with football is as dumb as he is, and Lyla is usually annoying but has her moments once in a while where she just kicks ass).

The show is top-notch, and it has truly earned every ounce of critical appeal. The DVD is cheap, and there is even a money-back guarantee if you don't like it (but I will). Give it about six epi- sodes, or if you violently hate it, then it may not be for you, but if you find yourself quite liking it, continue on, and you'll feel the love.

A Robin Can predict the Past

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 6, 2007
Spoiler - Harry Potter

Jasmine Brody
Shipper

Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows was the most anticipated movie of the summer, and it was worth the wait. From tear-jerking moments to action-packed scenes, J.K. Rowling delivered a perfect conclusion to the seven-book series. The book opens with Harry, pending his final departure to the Burrow. He had to call home for seventeen years—the Dursleys’ house. After an interesting farewell, in which Dudley reveals that he is more grateful for Harry’s presence than he lets on, seven Harry departs for seven different secret locations that all have ties to the Order of the Phoenix. Voldemort, having heard of this, plans the surprise, and the Order sees our first death of Book seven. When Muriel Weasley, Mrs. Weasley’s sister, is killed, Harry must leave to buzz up the car carrying his dead companion. Also in this part, George is an auror. Rowling lightens the mood by keeping it in the present day. In a twist to Mad-Eye, he says “os, os.”

As the book progresses, Harry, Ron, and Hermione find themselves on a journey that tests their limits, friendship, and even some happiness and romance. One such highlight is Bill and Fleur’s beautiful wedding. Although it is interrupted by the Ministry of Magic’s collapse, their love was just joyous moment for the Weasleys and Harry. Another such moment is the return of the Weasleys. Frustrated by the lack of progress in their journey, Ron leaves Hermione and Harry. Dumbledore, however, foreseeing this difficulty equipped Ron with his Deedenser so that he could find his way back. Not only does he accomplish this, but it comes at a time when Harry needs him most. After saving Harry’s life, Ron shows through a Weasley family photo where an image shows Harry. Ron, and Hermione are captured and taken to the Malfoy’s house. Their narrow escape allows them to get the aid of Dobby, but it comes at a heavy price. As they reach their next destination, Harry finds out that a knife thrown by Bellatrix LeStrange had pierced the house-off and he is beyond range. It is time for the final battle, and when Harry chooses to bury the house-off without the aid of magic. Harry uses this time to reflect and decide what he must do.

From this point on, the book picks up. After breaking into Gringotts to buy and swap a dragon, the three friends end up back at Hogwart’s for the final showdown. This part of the book really shows us how much has changed. Rowling does a great job of balancing moments of despair with happy occurrences and even manages to slip in some jokes. Fred’s death is balanced by the return of another Weasley. Percy. And although both Tonks and Lupin die so soon after the birth of their son, it is offset by the fact that Ron and Hermione finally share the kiss they’ve been waiting for at a time. Mrs. Weasley has her own moment of glory when she destroys LeStrange, yelling, “Not my daughter, you bitch!” The whole book comes together, and Harry manages to finally destroy You-Know-Who.

The epilogue goes on to say where they all are 19 years in the future. Harry and Hermione are married with two kids, while Harry and Ginny have three children named after people who have had an impact on Harry’s life. Harry is the go-between to Teddy that Sirius was never able to be to Harry. All in all, the book’s ending was satisfying. With such high expectation, it could be a possibility to live up to such huge expectations, but I think J.K. Rowling did that and more.

T.N. V. Now, on to the article. (If you know what Weiblo.com is, jump to the $8 sign. If you know Weiblo, you jump to the $8 sign. If you know the secrets of YouTube, move on to another article.)

For a couple of years now, the movie industry has experienced a tremendous degree of O’Neill Media as Weiblo.2.0. Most likely familiar to most who watch a lot of TV on YouTube and YouTube on YouTube. To help, here are a few things you can also check out YouTube videos for topics on this topic. While those can be helpful, the biggest hint is ultimately the greatest and most humble.

Hint #1: Make an eye-catching thumbnail. The thumbnail is taken as a snapshot from the very middle of your video, so be sure to add an image or video clip in this spot for the thumbnail. Eye-catching can mean your thumbnail is a lot of different things. The things most likely to be clicked on are either controversial, of a sexual nature, relating to a famous person or just something absolutely insane. Not sure what’s absolutely insane? It’s just the ones that will make the usual-click-chasing-impending-eating ice cream.

Hint #2: Make your video blow. “Me Playing Piano” is not your title. For your title, you want to aim high and creative, but within the lines. ‘Some Zombie Themes Played in Every Church... ’ In 10 minutes. If you’re a nerd. (Editor’s Note: David Banner is a nerd.) Don’t get me wrong. It’s not even close. Anyway, there are people who ruin your YouTube reputation by focusing on short term gains.

The lesson: Focus on the long term. A consistent reputation gives you a consistent subscriber base. Think: Nickelodeon started showing videos like Hip Hop, the viewers (kids) would be confused, and their parents would change the channel.

Hint #8: Get sponsored by a (which is huge company. Although wicked is a suspect adjective, I’m talking about the for the NCBA. With such hard to do. always do, agree to a multi-continent company to sponsor your show or present their stuff on your show on their network. We have faith in those who truly know what they want and are willing to take it off.

Hint #4: Be consis- tent. If your goal is to be the next Fox News, then try not to be away from the Geraldo Rivera that we all know and love. If your goal is to be the next Conan O’Brien, you’ll be out of luck. But hey, at least try to be funny on a consistent basis?

Hint #7: Decide to either sell out or not. We’ve seen so many people do it. Basically if you have a unique point of view, people will want to buy it. In my opinion, we’ll see a lot of people sell out. Maybe.

Hint #10: Keep these hints secret and safe. If more people know about these hints then your chance of becoming the most viewed YouTube on YouTube will be slimmer to ab...

You Ain’t Seen Nothing Yet — Pat’s Level of Integrity: Questionable

By: Branden Luquette - Sports Writer

Football is officially been woven a lot of great things including a dominant and controversial win by the Patriots this week. However, one of the horror stories such as the tragic injury of Kevin Everett who, in a recent game, was the latest to be walking on the sidelines. The NFL is again, however, this doesn’t mean every team is doing well. They won’t be handing out any trophies just yet, and nobody oversees Cleveland has been left penniless. Here’s a few things that should be different in the upcoming weeks.

Explain basics back to a few teams that went into this week. It holds to believe the Saints won’t be a better team this week at Tampa Bay. With no offensive touchdowns, the only play they can go up is, and I fully expect they will. Baltimore was beaten Monday night and will be tough to come on board for them. If they can get healthy and hold on the ball, we’ll see if they have the tools to make noise this season. Despite their own looming deficiencies, Chicago should arguably thrive in the NFC. They should settle in as a second-tier team in the NFC, much like last season.

Explain the number one team in the NFC to be defined. Being a New England fan, it is easy to put the Patriots up at top. It’s probably injury and too. There’s an argument to be had in Indianapolis though. The Colts looked real strong in the Thursday night opener’s against the Saints on the both sides of the ball. It’s hard to pinpoint of these teams up about the other. The Patriots performance against the Chargers in week 2 will help answer the question of who the top dog is as we went the week. nine showdown between the two teams.

Explain the top two picks in your fantasy draft to start seeing trends. Lamar Jackson and Julio Jones managed to drag the by throwing a touchdown pass, but his team could not carry out very LfL to. As for Stephen Jackson, a one-point performance in many cases, can not be a must-win situation between a win and a loss for many fantasy squads. Exposing his total number of last fund has lost at least 10. Julio Jones should be back to business as usual in week 2 at home versus San Francisco.

Now I am just as sick and tired of this as any New England fan is. I bet. But hope when these team fans don’t hold their favorite team to the same standards. Prime example: our own New England Patriots. Since 2004 when the magical Super Bowl run started, Patriots fans have taken the “holler than them” approach. We bragged about the “Patriot Way” and “Patric Players” who put out the right way. They were blue-collar workers who were hard, took nothing for granted, won less money to their championship and achieved all they did while maintaining a smile and the respect of their fans and foes. And operating this way well. Went 49 years without winning a Super Bowl. Actually, the win never stopped, but the Super Bowls did. After two years of failure to reach the Super Bowl, it’s the time to change.

And now we hear that the Patriots may have been secretly using a camera crew to steal signals from the Jets sideline. There are specific rules against this in the NFL, rules book and the Patriots have been warned against doing it in the past. Again, fans try to jussy all this, just like at the time, the Patriots didn’t operate like ev- eryone else. They did every little thing to achieve the same standards. They held themselves to a higher standard, as did we. So while I am not pleased to have to hand this situation over to another higher authority.

Then came the news of Rodney Harrison’s HGTV Flip. Rodney claims he didn’t take it to get a competitive advantage. He did it to help recover from injury faster so he could return to the field.

Players whose official rookie season wouldn’t be until next year may be making major contributions to the Red Sox lineup. Their lineup of the twenty five man roster in October could be crucial in getting this team to compete for another championship. The next few weeks for Red Sox fans should be claimed if it not for their best. I certainly expect more swing away numbers comparable to an MVP candidate in 2013. We don’t want, nor can we be so analytic about the Red Sox World Series Run.

The other key younger the Sox should take on the 25 man roster is Clay Buchholz. Buchholz, also just 25, recently spurned a no hitter in just his second major league start ever. Obviously in rare company, Buchholz proves to be the future anchor of the Red Sox staff. But what about this season? Can Buchholz contribute to a Series win for the Sox now? Unfortunately, yet necessarily, the Sox general manager Theo Epstein would say to skip the number of innings Buchholz throws this season to preserve his arm. He has already thrown 59 and 59, he has 22 hits on two doubles, a triple, and three home runs. He has 27 strikeouts, 573, and his OBP is .415. He has already stolen four bases, scored from second base in a run ball, beat out a routine grounder to short, and fell a double short of the three in a game where he only had three plate appearances. He is probably faster than Red Sox legend Dave Roberts, and has a better defensive arm than Sox everyday CF Coco Crisp. Essentially, Buchholz is putting up a very small sample of games. Elijah is putting up a lot of innings, and they may very well be on his innings number. But a number of another title. Their socks may not be bleeding red, but watch Buchholz put up a figure heavy in the Red Sox postseason success in 2007.

If the Patriots pick, they see the NFL scheduled too good of a game too early in the season. Two of the best teams will go at it this week. If I fully expect the Patriots to get run on fairly easily without stud Seymour and Harrison. I also expect them to score a lot of points. At the conference that occurred in San Diego in January, I expect the Chargers to be just a little more hungry than the Patriots. This can be a good sign, but I believe it is one of the two games the Patriots will lose this year. Unfortunately, yet necessarily, the Sox general manager Theo Epstein would say to skip the number of innings Buchholz throws this season to preserve his arm. He has already thrown 59 and 59, he has 22 hits on two doubles, a triple, and three home runs. He has 27 strikeouts, 573, and his OBP is .415. He has already stolen four bases, scored from second base in a run ball, beat out a routine grounder to short, and fell a double short of the three in a game where he also only had three plate appearances.
