Babson Expands Master's Program

New Degrees Aimed at Meeting Corporate Needs By Building Portfolio of "Capstone" Programs

ERIK DAY MURRAY Executive Editor

Babson College received approval to offer the Master of Science in Management degree from the Massachusetts Board of Higher Education this fall. The change to Babson's charter came after the proposal was approved in just under three months.

"Our hands were tied if all we could offer was an MBA," said Thomas Moore, Dean Murata of the Olis School of Business.

Babson will now be able to offer management of Science degrees in Management Information Systems, Entrepreneurship, Marketing Management and Financial Management.

There are no current plans to offer the Master of Science in Management degree publicly, though. Instead, the school plans to focus on Captive Programs, which are graduate programs designed for specific corporations.

Annual Awards Ceremony Celebrated Amidst Family

TRICIA CURELLIS Associate Editor

The Undergraduate Awards Ceremony was held this Saturday, October 16 in the Scarsone Theater as part of Family Weekend. The ceremony is meant to recognize outstanding and deserving students.

The Michael Sainio Memorial Award was presented to Brian Ellis and Abigail Fabrice. This award is given to a man or woman in the sophomore class who, as a freshman, Babson excelled academically, (awarding the required GPA of 3.5) as well as made contributions to the Babson community through their involvement.

Brian Ellis reacted to winning by saying, "Karen Kus told me that I was in line to win something, but I wouldn't tell me exactly what after much haggling. It was both a pleasure and a surprise to win and I'm glad I didn't tell me before.

Executive Education Ranked No. 1 in Entrepreneurship

COLLEGE MARKETING PRESS RELEASE

Business Week magazine named the Babson School of Executive Education number one in its "Top 20 of Entrepreneurship" category, and fourteen among the top 50 programs for nondegree study, in its biennial survey results just released. Its top five schools for Entrepreneurship are 1) Babson; 2) Pennsylvania (Wharton); 3) Harvard; 4) Stanford; and 5) Dartmouth (Tuck).

Babson's Executive Education Special Report appeared in the October 18 issue, currently available on newsstands. The report is also available online at www.businessweek.com. The ranking is determined by a Business Week survey of corporate human resources and management development executives.

"We are pleased that industry executives recognize our leadership in entrepreneurial management education," said Robert Ruggman Halperin, associate dean and director, Babson Executive Education. "Babson's innovative programs offer a highly interactive and challenging experience for our multinational clients."

Babson was also featured in the article "Where Big Shots Learn to Think Like Hotshots." According to Halperin, reports spent a "full day of Babson recently meeting with our faculty, administrators, and clients, and sitting in on classes at the Center for Executive Education." Halperin also mentioned a community email that he was "delighted that the outstanding performance of Babson faculty and staff, and our world-renowned expertise in entrepreneurial management education, is being recognized by Business Week and the excess during who Moldea's investigation lead him to find the mistress of Bob Livingston, the then Speaker-Abbot of the House of Representatives and one of Clinton's strongest moral opponents.

Upon learning that people knew of his mistress Livingston resigned, urging Clinton to do the same. One month later, West Virginia Senator Robert Byrd, also a strong critic of Clinton's, made an announcement asking that all charges against the President be Inside our Wave® radio is a Bose technology so unique it won its creators the "Inventor of the Year" award. And so effective it delivers the kind of performance that makes your jaw drop.

But it's hard to get past the fact that it looks like a clock radio.

So, which was the biggest challenge— inventing it or marketing it?

After all, to appreciate the technology, you've got to hear the performance—but who wants to make a special trip just to hear "another clock radio?" Especially one that costs as much as this one?

This is the kind of marketing challenge that drives us at Bose. If it's the kind of challenge that drives you too, come talk to us about our rotational program for MBAs.

You'll get a shot at a fast-track career in marketing management.

Not to mention a chance to change the way the world listens to music.

This new degree is in addition to the degrees currently offered by Babson College and the Olin Graduate School of Business.

Education
The proposal itself took several months to compile by Henry Deneault, Associate Vice President of Academic Affairs, but it's high quality and attention to detail resulted in it being fast tracked through the review and approval process in just three months. The process normally takes the Massachusetts Board of Higher Education close to a year.

"Hank did a great job as always," said Dean Moore. In fact, the board was so impressed by the proposal that they have requested a copy of it for use as a model for future proposals presented to them.

The Steering Committee in addition to the MBA, BS and part-time Master of Science in Accounting degrees currently offered by Babson College and the Olin Graduate School of Business.

Memoriam to Adam Ayer

SAL D'AGOSTINO
CLASS OF 1999

I came home from work on Tuesday after battling the New York Traffic to find my copy of the Babson Bulletin lying on my desk. I threw my briefcase on the bed, grabbed the magazine and flipped through a few of the pages, looking for familiar names or faces. Unfortunately, I found a name which I knew, in a place where I never thought to find it.

I met Adam Ayer my second day at Babson College, as I was still busy unpacking my things and getting to know my roommates. He was a shy kid, the classic New England guy, wearing faded plain shirts and khaki pants. His hair was parted perfectly; even his room was arranged with everything in its place, with posters of Delon Sanders and Arnold Schwarzenegger adorning the wall.

Adam was a transfer from Boston University who loved to play hockey, but knew he would be no more than a benchwarmer. He loved joking around, but he always seemed to need it quiet when it was time to study.

On those cold October nights in 1995 we stayed up late watching the Red Sox lose in the playoffs, while my beloved Yankees rose and fell along side of them.

Adam was just a great guy. He was a unique, genuine, person that I was lucky to meet in my time at Babson. And as I am flipping through the pages of the bulletin, I come to find out that on May 27, 1999... Adam died. It is now too late to explain... and offers no little condolence.

Like so many other friends and acquaintances from college, we slowly drifted apart. I found an old picture of us from Harvest Ball in the fall of '95. Of course he brought the beer, while all night we sat and spoke about our girlfriends and all of the other college garbage that we are all too accustomed to. I can't help but think of how little we all knew, and continue to know about the future.

I know that the last thing in the world that you would want to do is read about someone you know that you know about. I still offer this story of my friend, who was so great to me and made the feel at home at a strange place.

I offer it to you with another guarantee that if there is one thing that is certain, it is that there are no guarantees in life. You have heard before that you need to make each day count, especially when you are fortunate enough to be in college, and a great college at that.

Some of us from '95 remember Michael Conlon and how difficult it was to feel the warm candlelight on our faces, as we stood outside of Adam was one of the nicest people that I met at Babson.

Trim in a quiet vigil, with a cool breeze surrounding us, I realize that there will be no such vigil for Adam, and that saddens me. He was a great guy, a good kid, and just the clean-cut, white bread, normal, kind of guy that you need to be around genuine person. I will miss him for all of these reasons and so much more.

So I ask you not to worry too much about the news, but every so often perhaps we should all try and appreciate the present. Life is fragile and precious. We all need to live each day as a gift, and remember to have fun with what we can, before it's too late.

Fall Concert Fails to Break Even

The number of tickets sold for last Sunday's Vertical Horizon concert sponsored by the Student Government Association (SGA) totaled 124, well under the 464 tickets needed to break even. An estimated loss of just over $3,000 for SGA is anticipated.

Approximately $1,500 from SGA's self-promotion budget, used for such activities as production of T-shirts and banners, will be used to partially cover the loss. Surplus funds remaining from last year's budget will account for the remaining amount.

Matthew Benjamin, President of SGA said, "The concert was amazing and everyone there will agree. I just wish that more students took this opportunity to see a great live band."

Regan Succeeds Dowler as VP of Communications

Scott Dowler resigned as VP of Communications on Student Government Association's (SGA) Executive Board this week. Dowler's election as president of the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity necessitated the move as campus by-laws do not permit an individual to hold elected office in two organizations.

Regan's resignation was unexpected as he was appointed to succeed Dowler's former position. "Regan's enthusiasm for his new post was evident in his statement that, "I look forward to working with Matthew Benjamin and the rest of the Executive Board this year as we try to make the SGA a more active organization on campus.""

In an interview with Carol Lloyd of Salon magazine, Moldea said, "History will cite the resignation of Bob Livingston as well as Larry's role in that decision as the critical moment that diffused the entire impeachment process, and I'm proud to had been associated with him." Aimee DOLUMNS "00 said, "Moldea's presentation brought issues to the community that aren't discussed on a regular basis. It was intriguing and thought-provoking." Sullivan added, "I thought that Moldea was thought-provoking, honest, and fascinating. His obvious struggle with the idea of working forFive to dig up dirt on political hypocrites who attacked President Clinton for doing the same things they were doing was powerful and disturbing."

Since 1978, Moldea has published seven books, including Dark Victory: Ronald Reagan, MCA and the Mob. The next presenter in the Compass Speaker Series will be Henry Kolberg, an Auschwitz survivor on November 1 at 7 P.M. in the Glavin Family Chapel. October 21, 1999

Dear Babson Community,

Thank you for your ongoing support over the past year and a half. Both the college administration and the student body have been so good to us, giving us office space, corporate contacts, and most of all, good advice. Because of you, our business has grown closer to what we dream it can be. None of this could have been possible without you.

Many of you have noticed that we did not run a newsletter in last week's Babson Free Press. Let us assure you, all is well at NobelCom.com. Over the past month, we have experienced tremendous growth. Because we have grown so fast, the normal day-to-day operation of the company takes up all of our time. Some of our team members are working 12 hours per day, 7 days per week. The work ethic and level of commitment present in this company is unlike anything that most of us have ever seen. We did not run a newsletter in last week's Babson Free Press simply because we were too busy to create one.

Some of you have listened in on our interview in the Arthur Blanc Center for Entrepreneurship with YES! Entrepreneurs! Tour of America (if not, check it out at www.sayyes.com). Others of you have heard about our upcoming article in the Babson Alumni Newsletter. Some very exciting things are happening here. As the NobelCom.com Team continues to expand, our corporate outlook expands with it. Brian Sharwood, a Babson MBA student and our new CFO, recently reported that our new marketing projects should increase our revenues and profitability to even higher levels than before. We are glad to report that all of the projects brought in by Babson students and faculty are running smoothly and generating modest incomes.

Sigmund Freud once said, "You know that the more magnificent the prospect, the lesser the certainty, and also the greater the passion." Our prospect is magnificent, and without doubt, so is our passion. Because of the help and encouragement we have received from the Babson community, we finally have the certainty needed to be a real success and we thank you for your continued support.

Sincerely,

The NobelCom.com Team

Editor-in-Chief

I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the Center for Career Development (CSD) staff for their continued presence of some notable companies that have worked hard to ensure that the paper may be more aligned with your goals.

As editor of the paper, we have realized that there is an immediate need to bring new and fresh content to our readers. As a result, we have decided to bring in a new team of writers to ensure that the content may be more relevant to our community.

It is of equal importance to congratulate the Babson students who took full advantage of this day. As the new Director at CDD, I wish to express my gratitude to the students for their participation in the event. The students who attended the event at the university were very happy to support the event. We hope that the students who attended the event will continue to support the event in the future.

Student Government Association (SGA) President Matthew Benjamin should be commended for taking the initiative of trying to inject some fun and spirit into this school. This was a big name brand that the students do not know, SGA sponsored a concert at Vertical Horizon and Day Vertical and the concert was a sellout. The concert was a sellout with tickets going for $10 per ticket. It was a sold-out concert with tickets going for $10 per ticket. I would like to congratulate Vertical Horizon and the editorial cartoon were not handled properly to ensure a balanced paper.

If you have any questions or comments about this issue, please feel free to send them to us at babsonweek@babson.edu or babsonweek@thelab.com. We look forward to hearing from you.

Vertical Horizon Concert and Matthew Benjamin Commended

If you have not heard of Vertical Horizon, go to their website at www.verticalhorizon.com or talk to any of their fans on campus. They are a great band and very fun to see live.

The first time you stayed home in your room and did nothing, I feel bad for you. This concert was done in order to bring new and fresh content to our readers. It is a concert that I have no doubt that even if it was held on campus, I would have attended. It was a sell-out concert and I am sure that Vertical Horizon and the editorial cartoon were not handled properly to ensure a balanced paper.

If you have any questions or comments about this issue, please feel free to send them to us at babsonweek@babson.edu or babsonweek@thelab.com. We look forward to hearing from you.

Fatboy Slim Article Needed More Research

In Sean Carrarah's October 7 Lifestyles piece, he starts out well by raising some interesting questions about the nature of pop music, but then he veers off into a somewhat rambling,targets electronic music and asking, "has Fatboy Slim ever tried being a DJ?"

I can understand where he was coming from. Fatboy Slim has always been a skilled DJ and has a unique style that has earned him a dedicated following. However, I believe that he could have done more to explain his ideas in a clearer and more concise manner.

If you have a complaint, please propose a solution. I have too much love for Babson to have someone constantly writing something negative, untrue, uncharitable, and misinformed, which aims to harm others. If you do not like Babson, I am sure you have other ways to express your opinion.

I hope that you will continue to enjoy reading Babson Free Press online. Keep up the good work! We look forward to hearing from you.

Advertising Content Found Offensive

As Director of Physical Plant, Babson employees in Physical Plant often read The Babson Free Press to keep up with what's going on around the campus and to get a feel for the culture of Babson. As a result, we have decided to introduce a new policy for the advertising content that appears in the paper.

Unfortunately, the October 7, 1996 issue found its way into my hands, and I read, I came upon an ad that truly offended me. This particular ad for a company that has advertised in Physical Plant before was offensive and should not have been approved for publication.

I have always believed that any job worth doing is worth doing well. Some people might say that the Babson Free Press is an old-fashioned publication. However, I believe that the people who clean your toilet every week has a PhD. Burbank has a PhD away in high school.

I understand that selling advertising space in your newspaper covers your expenses, but I think that you should be more selective and sensitive to the needs of our community. I am not sure if we are at the right place to be at DAVE PEDUTO DIRECTOR OF PHYSICAL PLANT

In the event of a conflict between this editorial and the advertising content that appears in the paper, we will give preference to the editorial content.

The "Talking Heads" of Television Are Out of Control

JAMES BASBAS
STAFF WRITER

Television "talking heads," as they are sometimes referred to, have finally gone too far. Instead of just commenting on activities and adding useful information, announcers and commentators have decided that they should be the center of attention. This really upsets me.

I was noticing it when I am watching something and there isn't time to breathe, but every second is filled with someone talking. This incredible irritation was brought to a new level last week.

I was watching the baseball playoffs. The baseball was great, but the announcing was not. It wasn't just bad; it was so awful that I ended up muting it. I don't understand announcers.

Bob Costas is the worst. Have you ever attended a baseball game and said, "Man, I wish there was an announcer here?" No, because they take away from the game, not add to it.

I want to watch baseball, but I don't want to hear about how many times the batter had hit with his teeth each game (Costas did this in the Division Series). I'm not even sure announcers manufacturing emotion, they display that information on the screen. So what are the announcers left to do?

They feel obligated to fill every second with speeches. It gets really bad when a game gets out of hand, like when a team is winning 8-2. As Costas stated last week, "In an 8-2 game, you have to dig deep into your reserves of information before you know that Bob. Just let us watch the game."

This isn't just in sports. It happens in parades, political events, and other events. Announcers will try to make themselves the center of attention, rather than the event. There is simply no need for that.

When someone is watching the Thanksgiving Day Parade or the State of the Union address, they are watching it for that reason, not to hear you talk on and on.

Do announcers have a purpose? Yes, it is always good to hear a little political commentary or maybe a former football player's thoughts. However, some announcers/commentators take this to the extreme.

Costas exemplifies this. Even Costas admits to his "ridiculous" sugarcoating of every event, that the Greater Greensboro Open is presented as some treasured piece of memories that we'll always cherish. The tinkling piano music that makes everything in sports a Hallmark card. However he continues to do it as well fill every open second with inane banter about the price of pre-tzels at Wrigley Field in 1972.

Portable B.S. in Business Administration: Coping After the Career Expo

ALEXANDER HANDY
Class of 1996

If the Career Expo was not the be all, and all of your recruiting existence, do not fret. There are ways to get jobs at companies that were not present. You can fill out an application in any McDonald's franchise.

The absolute irony of recruiting might be the fact that most students, leaving you disenfranchised. The underlining trick to recruiting is to either believe the hype or understand that it is hype. If you understand that it is hype, you will be better off once you join the workforce.

At one recruiting session at another school far, far away, Proctor and Gamble gave out little bags of deodorant and soap which one attendee found to be a stupid gift. They showed a video which had more in common with Saturday Night Live than a soap-making company.

Their pet food philosophy was "It's not pet food, it's oat and dog nutrition." Maybe it sells the product to an uninformed and gullible consumer, but why would they be preaching that to their potential recruits?

It is no better at Babson. To see an oddity of the traditions of the Expo, think of what would be said if everyone took truth serum. Think of how much fun you would have if you had had snappy responses to the maniacal representatives from the different companies. So what if you could see your career going down the drain? At least you would know where it is going.

Back at the Expo, you might have learned about the ideal candidate. They were searching for the perfect ABC. They usually say something like: "We're looking for a well rounded student." To which you should respond, "A Jack-Of-All-Trades but a master of none?"

Then the guy would get all smug thinking he will one-up you when he says, "No, no. Master of all trades, Jack of none."

If I had that good you couldn't afford the shoe, you say and then walk away. Whether it is Frito-Lay stacking bags of potato chips or a liquor distributor showing pictures of all the trendy brands they sell, they think you will see their ordinary products as glamorous.

An honest interchange would have started like this:

"Wow, a liquor distributor," says the student.

"That's us," replies the guy.

The student asks: "What's it like working for you?"

"First I do all the routes. Then I park the van in the park. Get in back and sample the merchandise. It's a quality control thing."

"That's so cool."

"Yeah, it would be, but I'm just kidding. I could be shipping those widgets from your economics class and my job wouldn't be any different."

The student is still goggly-eyed:

"But I know these products."

"And that's why you can't afford the shoe."

"I could sell this stuff all day."

"There is a plus, I guess. Instead of stealing widgets or Tylenol and trying to resell it in a back alley, I can steal a trip to Bermuda."

"Please hire me," begs the student. On the hot line, he hears that resell 35 cents of boxes for much more. Marketing is expensive. If one student had been more direct with the guy behind the table their conversation would have gone something like this:

The salesmen from Kohl's tells the student: "We require a minimum GPA of 3.0."

"To sell cereal" the student asks unable to hide his shock."

"Yes."

"I could have the greatest sales skills in the world, but you wouldn't hire me."

"My GPA was a 2.99."

"We believe that no one with a GPA above 3.0 could be the greatest salesman."

"No wonder your cereal sucks."

"Our time is very valuable."

"I could save you money and bring in a lot of dough."

"A student spent time playing and drinking beer."

"He's be a Class Officer, and their grades plummeted. However they they have great people skills, but to a low GPA they cannot use them."

After that, just listen to the pretentious student at a local consulting company blast on and on: "Basically, we got to analyze the situation. After presenting our findings we seek to ensure that the company implements our proposal. If the company can implement 75 percent of what we tell them then we did great. You're looking to make a maximum impact in the shortest time."

If only the kid had said: "So basically you seek to maximize your firm's income by not wasting your time with the client."

"Our time is very valuable," the consultant might have said.

"So mine is. I'm leaving. An answer worthy of the situation."

Walk out, go to the career center, copy down addresses to insert into your form-cover-letter and drop tons of resumes in the box, or just plan a trip to Bermuda."

Editor's Note: Mister Handy, the author of "Portable B.S. in Business Administration" and Career Expo and has drawn these examples on truth serum from his cumulative experience.

Another Family Weekend has come and gone. While it seemed to me that not as much had been accomplished as I had hoped, the weekend did not go exactly as planned. The kids enjoyed their time, and the weather was beautiful. It's amazing how much more enjoyable a weekend can be if you take the time to appreciate all of the sounds and sights around you.

I'm thinking of the time I spent with the family in the park, watching them play and talk. It's amazing how much more enjoyable a weekend can be if you take the time to appreciate all of the sounds and sights around you.

TRIS

Serves main menu items as carved ham, festive balloon bouquets, and the garnish of your choice to impress any guest to your family. The dish is given a professional finishing touch of sugar, milk and a dash of bitters. The fabled trust fund was used to pay God so that he might ensure idyllic weather conditions for the following week.

What bothers me about the whole situation is that it seems unnecessary. I'm not sure that I would do these elaborate diets. What's most pertinent is the inherent concession made by the college, in pursuing these income provements, that the status quo doesn't meet a requirement.

Why, for instance, change the type of sausage served at Tris if you believe the current mixes to be perfectly acceptable? Why aren't parking tickets handed out to those who park in the wrong spot so frequently on the first few days of the semester?

"Not Your Average Joe's" Is Anything But

HEATH WICHERY

Possessing a rather boring and traditional palate, I munch away on the usual fare at Joe's, a 30-calorie, perfect blend of tomato sauce, mozzarella cheese, bacon, and garlic propor tioned to a personal, yet large taste.

Another dish includes a roasted duck (30-calories), an apple, a corned beef, and a 30-calorie salad with tossed with whipped cream and eyes, a cherry. The extended dinner menu also boasts a savory chocolate mouse and a key lime pie.

The only real complaint for Not Your Average Joe's is that they expect pa ters to transport themselves to the restaurant unaided. Really, the least the catering staff could do is provide food carryout.

My personal favorite dessert is ap named "The Devil's Tower." Hazel scoops of ice cream studded with two tall angel food cake towers drenched with chocolate and caramel sauce, topped with whipped cream, and yes, a cherry. The extended dinner menu also boasts a savory chocolate mouse.

CCD News: How to Tackle the Dreaded Cover Letter

KAREN BLEAKNEY

Just seeing these two words make people nervous. In fact, many people do not even apply for jobs that require those two positions that require this piece of paper. It is the dreaded Cover Letter.

"What is it for?" "Why do I need it?" "How do I write one?" "What should it say?" It fills in students heads as they sit, staring in front of the keyboard, A.M., knowing the resume collection is the next day. This one piece of paper that is dreaded by many is the Cover Letter.

The purpose of a cover letter is to introduce the candidate to an employer, and encourage the employer to read the resume and call the candidate for an interview. It demonstrates that the student is a serious, professional candidate who is, indeed, interested in the position.

The cover letter serves as a writing sample to help compare and contrast the employment opportunities, but it is essential for the candidate to keep in mind the fierce competition for positions, without any errors.

The second paragraph of the cover letter consists of three paragraphs. The first paragraph states the reasons the job is the perfect fit for the person applying. It should be no more than 200 words. The second paragraph should also have a "hook" to keep the reader interested. The goal of this paragraph is to get the reader interested in the position. The third paragraph is for development advisors to review your cover letter, as well as answer any questions you might have.

For the desired position, without completely restating the resume, it is necessary to show how the candidate's abilities and experiences relate to the job description. It is essential that this paragraph is separate from the resume.

The third paragraph is the closure, meaning that a specific response should be made, as well as indicate the next step, (e.g., call, E-mail) with the next contact.

You can also use this paragraph to interview the potential employer and gain an understanding of the company and the position.

A Night of Giving & Thanks

TODD SCHERER
Concertmaster, Winds

For two days out of the year, Webster center closes its doors to the sweaty, hardworking students who love to blow off their Friday fitness routines. What begins as barely work. On Friday October 15, nearly one thousand alumni and friends gathered to exemplify the true depth of the entrepreneurial culture. Successful entrepreneurs understand that a business degree constitutes more than a good job and a network of opportunities; alumni graduates understand that their tangible contributions form the "field of know-how".

With 1207 Alumni and family members contributing, the 30th Annual President's Society provided fifty-six Presidential Scholarships and a new scholarship for Women's Leadership. One attendee told the Free Press that the scenery and ambiance of PepsiCo arena reminds her of "a quiet café overlooked by the shadows of Big Ben." With velvet couches, soft music, and candlelight, no one noticed the basketball rally that dragged on.

The campus (or not doing justice to calling it that) was full of sculptures and displays which, although not inexpensive to produce or at times actually, a result of a college. The excitement and enthusiasm itself is a result of the ingenuity of a diverse group, mainly, their CEO Guy Kawasaki. Kawasaki, who recognizes the creative talent within the university, has been known to found companies that have changed the world.

The Popes family realizes early on that the University of Babson College is one of the foremost colleges in the world. It is one of the most innovative institutions in the world that focuses on entrepreneurship. The Babson President's Society marks the minds of current entrepreneurs, with those of the past.

The Babson Players present: "Biloxi Blues"

"Biloxi Blues" Brings in the Best During Boot Camp

MICHAEL PANICO
STAFF WRITER

Audiences who saw "Biloxi Blues" this past Family Weekend were brought on board a train bound to follow the lives of five young men as they got a crash course in basic training, reality, and self-discipline. It was the most edgy play I have ever seen, combining slapstick humor with the seriousness of issues such as racism, prejudice, and sexuality. The story was based on Eugene M. Jerome's (Will Ballard '01) alter-ego views of life as he observed the effects of the pressures of basic training on his platoon and the conflicts that arose between the personalities.

Brought together to be trained for the Second World War, six young men were placed under the battle-hardened eye of Sgt. Marvin Tooney (Daren Lanza '01), who hilariously kept the new recruits doing pushups after pushups. The army assigned Tooney to turn the rowdy C Company into a well-disciplined, battle-ready fighting unit.

The other rookie soldiers included Arnold Epstein (Aaron Hostig '03), Wykowski (G. Don Jacobson III '01), Roy Seifridge (Adam Koncisz '00), Donald Carney (Jim Paga '01), and James Hennessey (Mark Whitman '01).

Honig did a great job in his debut Bahoon performance as the strong-willed Epstein who, despite constant ridicule and abuse, refused to give up his principles.

Jacobson was hilarious as the bald-headed Wykowski, a tough guy whose grotesque habits were only outweighed by his strength and courage.

Konzius was in a comic class all his own as the big-talking, hormonally charged Seifridge.

Adding more to the drama of the story were Page as the inquisitive Carney and Whitman as Hennessey, a soldier whose one decision draws several sexual liaisons with other men, which gets him in more trouble than anyone in the platoon could have imagined.

The platoon kept the whole audience laughing between Seifridge's kind of snicker and Koncisz's room antics and fantasies including the queen of England.

Also appearing was Christine Hogan '01 as Rowena, the revealng local prostitute, who launders for the vender of cheap erotic goods. The scene in which Koncisz is let in on the operation will be one not be forgotten anytime soon by most of the male students, whose approval was to load the balcony nearly collapsed on Thursday night.

On the other end of the spectrum was Trish Cubellis '01 as Daisy Hammingan, a sweet Catholic schoolgirl who steals Jerome's heart.

In the end, Jerome learns to accept the others in the platoon for both their positive and negative qualities. He also begins to trust his own judgements, and finally realizes for the first time that when he can't see how it could go wrong, he can choose to do it.

From scrubbing the latrine to confessing their deepest fantasies, the platoon learned as much about life and themselves as they did about soldiering during their ten weeks in Biloxi.

It was an excellent dramatic commentary that could not have been delivered better. The Bahoon Players deserve the utmost congratulations for a job well done.

The Baboon Players performed Neil Simon's "Biloxi Blues" in the Sorensen Center over Family Weekend. Next semester the players will present their spring musical, "Little Shop of Horrors."

The Writing Center celebrated the opening of its new facilities with a reception and Poetry Reading last Thursday, October 14, 1999. Professor Mary Pinard, organizer of this event, was "very interested in creating a community and environment where poetry is celebrated," where students and staff of the Babson community can come and feel comfortable about sharing their works.

The buzz of excitement filled the room and many students were heard commenting on the beautiful new facilities and the "wide range of topics and perspectives" that the poetry reading covered. Another student was overheard saying that she "digs the new cathedral kitchens of the writing center."

Those who participated in the reading are to be congratulated on their intriguing works and tremendous courage for sharing their inner thoughts with the listeners.

Erica Krzywienski began the reading with three poems, the first about her experience in London while cooking rice, which encouraged listeners to think about the little things in their lives and realize that simple things are often more important and complex than originally thought.

Her other two poems told stories and thoughts of her mother.

The most important lesson being that children can be as mean and ruthless as a mother will always forgive.

Professor Janet Landman entertained next through readings of her travels in France, while studying the vineyard industry. Through her use of haiku, she paints a picture in our heads of the beautiful vineyards and the processing of grapes into wine.

Next, Cheryl Nixon, a citizen of poetry who studies the personal, private, and emotional feelings that drive poets to write, read a controversial poem about women.

Fahad Bubshat read two love poems about his "White Dove," where he expressed what it takes to love, feel, protect, defraud, abuse, etc., and how, be loved by someone.

Sylvia Limm, who is doing her Honors Thesis in the process of writing poetry, read two poems. The fist, entitled "Quietly Thinking," was written in response to Pablo Picasso's portrait of "A Woman In White." Her second poem, "All At Once," paints a picture in your head of the moment when you simultaneously want to kiss someone and stop them in the face.

Professor Mary Pinard finished off the event with three fascinating poems. The first told of the experience of making a will and the effects of the mood that one happens to be in at that time.

The second told of her love for rocks, appropriately titled "Geolog," and relayed the feelings and stories of making a stone countertop. Her final poem was by Edward Hirsch, entitled "The Poet At 7:00," and appropriately described by Professor Pinard as expressing to the audience that there is poetry everywhere and everyone's a poet.

Edward Hirsch is the Thompson Visiting Poet for this year and will be coming to Babson on Wednesday, February 9, 2000. He will be meeting with students and the Babson community and giving a reading in the Sorensen Center.
Vertical Horizon Creates Much Excitement in Knight
Music Was and Is a Career to Them. They Are Driven Both Musically and in Business

Vertical Horizon was nice enough to grant an interview to the Bahson Free Press before their performance Sunday.

They are a young exciting band that develop a lot of time to their guitar at home while writing. He usually starts saying words and melodies, which eventually develops into an idea for a song.

He gives good advice to prospective songwriters, "Writing is not a journey from A to B, you don't know where it will go." He also stresses that "you have to know when to stop and take a break from writing."

Their favorite band is Van Halen, however Vertical Horizon (VH) is no comparison to his mini to Van Halen (VH).

Guitarist Keith Kane created the name, "It's something we thought we would keep for a while and then change, but we liked it so we stuck with it." Matt adds that "it's not what your called, it's what you put in it."

As mentioned a couple of weeks ago, this is an extremely business savvy band. They were aware early on that they only had a product. Matt states, "All the marketing in the world is useless if the product doesn't sell." (Marketing majors take note.)

Music is and is career to them. They are driven both musically and in business. In the beginning they had to handle basic bookkeeping by themselves, the accountant became their business manager. They also have a tour manager working for them.

The band members buy their own gear, but the band itself will pay for things to take care of the equipment such as cases.

They recently signed on with RCA Records. Matt explains some of the main reasons for this decision: "We felt really comfortable with them, they are privately owned, very stable, and have good connections in the music industry."

Keith adds, "They have a family feel." After selling almost 70,000 copies of previous records, it was RCA that pursued them, although the record was not as well.

They felt they needed to incorporate a record label, because they were "spending a lot of time dealing with the business, less time creating music."

"Spending too much time away from writing is harmful," states Matt. "It is important to keep writing because like a runner or a game, you have to keep your skills and can't let it go after you've taken a break."

They will be on tour until Christmas. Vertical Horizon currently writes in stagings of a new album some time next year, but nothing is definite.

From speaking with this group, it is clear that this band has what it takes to go to the top.

They have the necessary balance of being very committed as well as making things very fun and enjoyable for everyone involved.

They treated everyone involved with incredible respect, and their enthusiasm and dedication to their heads. I wish them the best of luck; maybe they can come back to Bahson soon when they win their Grammy!

It may be that in a few months, we will be seeing this band rising on the charts.

Vertical Horizon take a short break for a photo shoot with Student Government (SGA) President Matthew Scannell. SGA sponsored this fall concert event last Sunday evening in Knight Auditorium.

Concert Review: Get Down & Get Vertical!

Sunday night, a crowd of approximately 75 gathered to watch Howie Day and Vertical Horizon. Both are very talented and put on a great show. The crowd was small due in part to the Red Sox - Yankees series, but they were a very enthusiastic crowd and the performers did not seem to mind at all.

Howie Day opened the band. He is a very good singer who works well with the crowd. He played some of his own songs as well as a couple of Dave Matthews Band songs.

Day has great musical talent, and seemed to connect well with the crowd. Afterwards, an audience member remarked, "He seemed to know where the crowd was and fed off their energy."

Vertical Horizon began with a bang playing "Don't Tell Me." This was a great song to start with, and

The crowd was very responsive. All the songs they played were hits, and each of the performers threw in a few of their older songs as well.

Matt Scannell, the lead singer and guitarist, talked to the audience between songs, joking about the score of the game, speaking Japanese, and playing pieces of songs such as "These Are A Few Of My Favorite Things." After playing for over an hour, they ended the night with their two biggest hits, "Want" and "Make You Want." They ended by thanking everyone for coming and encouraging everyone to call their radio station with requests and visit their website, mwrck.com.

Vertical Horizon, who played at the Paradise the night before, was a great band who we were very fortunate to have come to Bahson College. In a few months, we will be seeing this band doing on the charts.

Maureen Fleming Gives a Graceful, Harmonious and Energetic Performance

Maureen Fleming shocked the Bahson community with "After Ever," a debut album. Bauch is a form of dance that focuses on the simplicity of the body and creates an energetic and ongoing evolution.

Fleming's performance was done wearing white body makeup so as to draw the attention to the movement and stimulate the emphasis on individualism. Fleming said, "When I dance I am usually painted totally white with makeup, overall and throughout the dance Fleming contorted into archetypal poses. Astonishingly, she did not get tired and never anchored herself to the staircase with just one limb."

After, while recording this dance, Fleming performed the

The dance was performed in a shallow round pond in the center of the stage.

The pond was spread in a shallow round pond in the center of the stage.

What was even more fantastic was that the ripples of the pond were reflected onto the ceiling of Sorensen and an image involving water ripples appeared on the screen behind the dancer.

This dance was quite captivating. Fleming commented, "I performed dances that lead the audience to a meditation point."

Fleming stepped into the pond, laying in it, becoming one with a symbol of nature, later using branches to end the dance with the image of a growing tree.

The next dance that Fleming performed was truly unique. This dance involved a growth in a shallow round pond in the center of the stage.

What was even more fantastic was that the ripples of the pond were reflected onto the ceiling of Sorensen and an image involving water ripples appeared on the screen behind the dancer.

The performance ends with Fleming on the floor, doing more movements that seem impossible and unrealistic, as a video plays in the background of her pas reheartals and performances.

Come join the controversial JSG Boggs (aka The Money Artist) in the Hope Gallery from 6-8 P.M. for light refreshments and money talks on Friday, October 20, 1999, and on Saturday, October 30, 1999, for a spectacular performance in Sorenson at 8 P.M. Born in New Jersey in 1955, Boggs spent his first few summers touring with a carnival in which his mother was a performer. After they had settled down in Tampa, Florida, Boggs’s artistic inclinations became clear, or as Boggs refers to it, his “artistic fate.” He began drawing and painting and by the time he was a teenager, it was clear to those around him that this was his calling.

For inspiration for his current works of representing world currencies came from his “Humdrum Series,” in which he explored his feelings and perceptions about the personality of numbers. He was also greatly influenced by Djembe Safari, previously known as “SOMOPO,” is a group of seven talented drummers, dancers, and singers from West Africa. They will be performing traditional music from West Africa while dressed in native costumes. They teach songs and chants in the native Wolof tongue and tell stories of life and Africa and the importance of drumming in everyday life.

Faustino Rios and El Arte Flamenco is a six-member group whose talents include dancing, choreographing, playing the Flamenco guitar, and playing the Canteor. This Spanish troupe has performed all around the world.

The O’Shea-Chaplin Academy of Irish Dance is led by Rita O’Shea-Chaplin and Lisa Chaplin. Rita was born in Galway, Ireland, and she has taught thousands of children Irish dance and culture. Lisa was born in Boston, MA, and has been teaching Irish Dance for ten years. Both are registered teachers with the Commission in Dublin, Ireland.

Djembe Safari is an ensemble of six of the most talented drummers and dancers of West African origin, combing more than 100 years of experience at the top level of the Senegalese and Guinean National Ballets.

Boggs would not sell the art, but rather used it to pay for his doughnut and coffee. For a long time. From this incident, he says, “the art began to dwell on the concept of value and how we establish the value of art, commodities and indeed, money.”

Since then, Boggs has aroused interest in London, Switzerland, Australia, the United States, and other areas of the world. He has been arrested several times for use of counterfeit money, however, this has not stopped him, and intelligent jurors have never found him guilty. The Secret Service continues to raid his home, office, and hotel rooms, confiscating his art work, yet not able to find a United States Attorney who is willing to charge him with counterfeiting. The Secret Service refuses to give back his art work, and Boggs is in the process of having his case heard before the Supreme Court in order to get back his confiscated material, while still using his art work to make transactions.

The final weeks of regular season play gave a glimpse of the upcoming playoff matchups-as.

The Bobson volleyball team rattled off its first win in the regular season by defeating the formidable TKC team 8-7 after four games, and came away with a bruising 25-16, 25-17, 25-15 victory over Union.

The Bobson volleyball team entered the UMass-Dartmouth Invitational Volleyball Tournament Saturday with a score line of 1-0-2 and three wins better and tournament championships in four matches in exciting days of volleyball action.

From there, Bobson moved on to face Union-Boston in the tournament semi-final. A tough four game match ensued in which Bobson took the first two games by a humping 15-0 defeat in game three before settling down to win the fourth and final game 15-11.

In the UMass-Dartmouth Invitational Volleyball Tournament Final, the Bobson girls were presented with another opportunity to beat UMass in front of their home crowd for the championship.

The Bobson girls immediately showed they were up for the task, shocking UMass in game one, 15-7. A second set battle developed as the teams traded wins and losses. UMass took two games and four, while Bobson took games three and five.

The victory was Bobson’s biggest of the season. Much of the credit goes to Alyssa Vlodarski ’03 who again proved her value as she was named to the All-Tournament Team.
