Sounds of Zeppelin and U2 to fill Knight Auditorium

By Larry Ganti
News Editor

This Saturday at Knight Auditorium, the waves of Led Zeppelin and U2 will wash up on the shores of Babson's Knight Auditorium. The Campus Activities Board is sponsoring a night of great sounds and free giveaways. Physical Graffiti and Rattle and Hum, the cover bands for Led Zeppelin and U2, will rock away the stress of the first few weeks of school.

All across the nation, cover bands and look-a-likes have been trying their fans on college campuses and night clubs. Unlike all the hundreds of unsuccessful look-a-like bands, Rattle and Hum and Physical Graffiti actually do look and sound like their respective covers. Johnny, the lead vocalist for Rattle and Hum, stated "the only way to give a real tribute to U2 is to look and play like them." According to students who have seen them, Rattle and Hum "stir up a storm with their almost identical appearance and sound." Like Rattle and Hum, Physical Graffiti is a carbon copy of Led Zeppelin.

Both cover bands have had their share of fame and glory. Rattle and Hum has played at just about every night club in New England. With two years of playing together, Rattle and Hum has been around the block. Physical Graffiti has been around for a bit longer than Rattle and Hum.

CAB hopes that the arrival of these two cover bands will boost the spirits of the community. In the past, Knight Auditorium parties have been of the same hoary nature. Rattle and Hum and Physical Graffiti will not only paint the walls of Knight, but will also refresh the spirit of the Babson community that once roamed the campus.

Massachusetts Cracks Down on Underage Drinking

By Larry Ganti
News Editor

Last month, the state of Massachusetts passed a new drunk driving law with major penalties for underage drunk drivers. This new law which affects all ages "establishes what is known as zero tolerance. Any driver under the age of 21 years convicted of a blood alcohol level greater than .02 will "result in automatic on-the-spot revocation of the driving license." A level of .02 is approximately equivalent to one drink or one can of beer. For any driver over the age of 21 years of age, the blood alcohol level of DWI, driving while intoxicated, is now .08, down from .10.

This new law of lowering the permitted blood alcohol levels has been lobbied by various organizations such as the Century Council, a national organization sponsored by the major beer, wine, and spirits producers.

According to state officials, there is major concern that despite recent publicity, many college students may not be aware of the new law. Officials of Babson College fear that this new law may not be circulated among the new international students: students who are generally accustomed to a lower drinking age, and have been known for attacking the MRDs and Avonals of the Boston area.

Publicity material and more information on the new alcohol law is available upon request from Paul Wetzel, Associates. To obtain this information call (617) 451-9663, or write to 43 Broad Street, Boston, MA 01109.

An Open Letter to the Babson Community

The following letter was submitted to the Babson Free Press, in order to inform community members of an event which occurred recently on campus. Anyone with any information is encouraged to come forth to the proper authorities.

Dear Babson Community:

We are writing to the Babson Community to report that a member of the faculty was the victim of a deplorable act of anti-Semitism over this past summer, when the word "Jew" and several swastikas and crosses were scratched on the person's office door. We are shocked and disappointed that a discriminatory act of this sort would take place at Babson.

We would like to express our outrage at such behavior, not only on behalf of the individual who was victimized, but also on behalf of others who were hurt by the incident. Behavior of this sort is totally inappropriate in an educational environment where, traditionally, differences are valued, not decried. This act, regrettable and sincerely though it was, may nevertheless serve to remind us all that we have our work cut out for us if we are to achieve the goals we have set for ourselves.

Sincerely,

Bill

Public Safety Update
By Zach Arbic Contributing Writer

One thing which is often taken for granted here at Babson is the safe environment. It is not often a student is attacked by a roving gang of accounting majors. Yet just because the Babson community is relatively safe, it does not mean our Department of Public Safety has allowed itself to fall behind in providing an invaluable service to the students.

As Larry Ganti reported last week, there are a number of changes currently being implemented by Public Safety in moving toward community based policing. Where Larry was wrong, however, in reporting that there was no student input involved in all of this decision making and implying that this was due to some sort of evil play by Human Resources. In fact, students have always had the opportunity to let Public Safety know about their concerns through the Public Safety Advisory Board. This board is an extension of SCA and just happens to be chaired by myself. Applications for the board are now available at the Information Booth located in Hollister.

There is no better time to get involved at the board and get such a resume building task like conducting interviews for potential officers and a new director, reviewing current policies and making recommendations for amendments, and dealing with a variety of public safety issues as they arise during the year. So take your application and give it a shot; anyone is welcome to apply.

Everyone should make an effort to get to know the Public Safety officers; they really are very nice people. You can look for Officer Jay Perault to be appearing on Baywatch sometime soon as a special guest star. Until next week, I bid you all adieu.

Amy Tan Entices Babson Students at Boston College
By Larrieve Hwang Staff Writer

The Asian Caucus of Boston College featured a lecture by bestselling novelist Amy Tan, last Tuesday evening of September 20, 1994. The Redstone Theater in which the lecture was taken place was filled beyond its maximum capacity with those who wished to see the successful and engaging author speak. Amy Tan is the author of two best-selling novels The Joy Luck Club and The Kitchen God’s Wife. Her novel, The Joy Luck Club was the longest-running best seller on the 1989 New York Times hard cover best-seller list, and has been translated into nineteen languages. She later co-wrote the screenplay for the largely successful movie adaptation of her book, The Kitchen God’s Wife, her second novel, reached the New York Times hard cover list as well.

The success of her novels and the enormous attention she was receiving from reviewers, literary critics, educators, and readers was the basis of Ms. Tan’s lecture. Amy Tan’s work has passed a literary milestone, and has created a new genre of American fiction titled “Multicultural Literature.” She expressed more concern than triumph over the tremendous impact of her novels on her readers. Her novels are now on many required reading lists of schools and academic departments such as “ethnic studies,” “Asian American studies,” or “multicultural studies.” Educators have claimed that her books held healthy and insightful portrayals of Chinese-Americans. They also stated that she had uniquely captured the immigrant experience, demystified the Chinese culture, and paved way for Asian American artists therefore students should be required to read her material to embrace “culture.” She somehow fulfilled her responsibility as a writer to educate readers about the Chinese culture, according to the educators. Her concern rested on the fact that her readers and reviewers believed that her novels encompass the entire Asian American culture. She did not want her readers to conclude that they could possibly know everything there is to know about China just by reading her novels. Ms. Tan voiced her thoughts and worries about the separation that exists in American fiction. Avoiding the label of “ethnic,” she considers herself to be an American writer, after all Chinese Americans are Americans as well. She emphasized the fact that if the writer is a minority, his or her work would be treated as a social or political matter, rather than work of fiction. She, as a Chinese American author, did not feel that she had to solely write about China, just like African Americans do not have to solely write about social oppression and racial tensions. There are many other topics that can be covered in their stories. Her purposes for writing The Joy Luck Club and The Kitchen God’s Wife were not to tell her readers how to think, but to enjoy the magic she creates out of her stories. She told the audience her feelings that writers should clearly indicate the reason why he or she writes, rather than having reviewers and critics claim their reasons for them. Amy Tan merely wants to produce a magical connection between herself and her readers.

New Attendance Policy
at Babson
By Mike Capizzano
Staff Writer

There is a new policy with regards to class attendance here at Babson. Previously, attendance was left to the discretion of the students; i.e., there was no formal attendance policy. However, effective for the 1994-1995 academic year, a significant change was made. Presently, it is at the discretion of the course instructors whether or not there is an attendance requirement for their classes.

Connie Bosse, Associate Dean of Undergraduates, tells the Free Press that this change was initiated by the faculty of Babson, and led by Professor Martin Tropp of the Humanities Department. The faculty had to approach the DMB - Decision Making Board - with their proposed change, then hold a vote on the issue. Ms. Bosse lacked detailed information regarding the voting results, but did indicate that the faculty as a whole was in favor of the new policy. Says Ms. Bosse, "Some instructors want their students to attend every class and some do not. The new attendance policy respects the interests of both groups."

Ms. Bosse favorably likened the change to Babson, creating a more "real-world" environment for Undergraduates. "When you go to work at a business, you can't tell your boss that you'll only show up 2 or 3 days each week." Instructors who require their students to attend class are providing a transition from high-school - where you were chased by someone if you did not attend class, to the work environment - where you are fired if you are not punctual.

Ms. Bosse also made the point that most of the faculty and administrators at Babson would like to see the students actually want to come to class.

When asked about the consequences of the new policy, Ms. Bosse answered that when attendance is required, it should merely reinforce what the students already want to come to class and learn. She also added that Babson is known for its high academic standards and the new policy is in keeping with them. Additionally, the policy is nowhere near as strict as it could be, and is at other colleges.

The primary purpose of the change was to allow the course instructors the freedom to determine how their classes are run. If students do not like the fact that a given instructor requires attendance, they are always free to transfer to another section during the drop/add period.

For those students who read this and cry, "What new attendance policy?" unfortunately there is no excuse. In the 1994-1995 Undergraduate Course Catalogue - which every undergraduate must sign a little blue card to acknowledge receipt of, the information is on page 77.

"Attendance policy for each class is at the discretion of the instructor. Also, the syllabus for each course should explicitly state the instructor's policy with regards to attendance.

Bridges not Barriers

By Ericka Quevedo
Opinions Editor

Since I was a child, I have been fascinated by bridges. I remember reading about the Eiffel Tower and the Golden Gate Bridge before I could even pronounce their names. I was intrigued by the idea of connecting two places, overcoming obstacles.

The problem is that most large, successful American corporations (including the government of course) don’t have much to do with cost effectiveness, market sensitivity, or any of the new ways of doing business we have been learning.

Think about it; if concepts such as TQM, JIT, or Activity Based Costing have only been around for a few years, how do you expect an eighty-eight year old corporate executive who has been running a massive hierarchical company both traditionally and profitably for fifty years to change? You don’t.

Some of the largest and most powerful companies in this country are dinosaurs headed for extinction. Sears has lost to Wal-Mart. GM and Chrysler have lost to the Japanese. And then there are companies like Viacom and Paramount who have lost to themselves. What worked in 1944 will not work in 1994. Those who are rigid in their ways either have broke or are beginning to break. Those who are flexible have adapted and survived.

So what then do you do as a bright young Babson graduate full of fresh ideas, and ready to save the world? Well, if you work for an established, prestigious, repressed, foolish, Fortune 500 company, you’d better be prepared to be frustrated. There is more government-like waste in today’s major corporations than you would like to believe. Much of what we are learning here may get you fired before it gets you a promotion. Nobody wants to hear how to do things right from a stoat nosed greenhorn out of Babson.

Your options are two-fold: Either adjust, adapt, forget, and grow old yourself, or learn from them. Be careful, however, what you learn. Contrary to what the Office of Career Services may preach, sometimes you may benefit most from learning what not to do.

Freshman's Analysis of Haiti and Clinton

By Alexander Handy
Staff Writer

This is a summary of events that occurred since last Thursday. The President gets on the television Thursday night and announces that there is a crisis in Haiti and gives scary reasons why this crisis must be met head on. He dispatches an envoy of negotiators to Haiti, and they are able to make a last minute deal so that an invasion does not have to take place and a peaceful accord is accomplished. Nowhere, or did the president get lucky? He wants the American public to believe that a man who never took a stand on anything went head to head with the Haitian General and won. Either this is a leader weaker than Clinton or this must be one of the most successful acts of showmanship in history. In the first place, the president, who was not going to attempt an invasion of Bosnia, was able to apply the same principles of Bosnia to Haiti. He was then going to attack Haiti because the country, the size of a peanut, was all of a sudden a threat to the United States. If he remembered consistent he will soon be prepared to attack Cuba and then off to Bosnia he will go. How do events, such as this Harold Hox, come to be planned? We'll, I can picture the new Chief of Staff to President Leon Panetta or James Carville, Clinton's campaign manager in the '92 presidential election, sitting in the Oval Office saying to the president, "Look Bill, mid-term elections are coming up and your poll numbers are terrible. We've got to do something or we will suffer a terrible defeat at the polls in '96. We need an issue that the Democrats can take to the voters." "How about Health Care it worked for me in '92" "Yes, it worked then, but this is now. We need a new crisis." "Listen, 42 million Americans are without healthcare and as president I must do something about it." "Bill, you don't understand you haven't done anything about it." "Blame it on the Republicans." "It won't work this time. We can't blame them when we have a majority in Congress. We have to do what George Bush did to boost his popularity. Only we'll do it closer to elections so that the popularity will still be at a high peak. We'll invade Haiti, only we won't really do it. First we'll negotiate with General Cedras and then when negotiations are finished, we'll announce we are going to invade if they don't get out. We'll send over an envoy of famous Americans and they won't know a thing. They and everyone else will think a last attempt at negotiations prevented a war with Haiti. We'll then see as the Diplomatic President solving a crisis through peace. Got that!" "What about Healthcare? You want to go to Mickey Ds?" "Just do what I say." A little far fetched? Maybe. Knowing sake, why in the world was the U.S. all of a sudden interested in Haiti? How was Carter able to prevent a war, a president who couldn't get hostages out of Iran, and in a last effort chance to save himself in the '80 election failed miserably? A cast of unlikely characters such as Clinton, Carter, and Cedras did something unexpected of them. A blake? They might as well enjoy it while they can. What about report that planes were in the air? Was Clinton planning on attacking with Carter in Haiti? If troops had landed what were they going to do? Who were they to shoot at? Were they just going to wait to be shot at so that they could know who to shoot at? It could be true. Maybe Clinton finally did take a stand and did what was right. The credit he gets with this accomplishment must be questioned on this one basis, not some JFK conspiracy which is only a joke with a point, and that is: what were we doing there in the first place. They don't have any oil. It is still not over, for Haiti must be occupied and peace established. There was a new name in the cast of characters and it was Colin Powell. Maybe those Washington Whispers should become Roxers and Powell should run for the White House. Anyone who could take this bunch of losers and turn them into winners by avoiding a war, which Clinton was about to cause, is ready for the Presidency of the United States. I wish all the luck to the men and women who serve our country in the U.S. Military, of which every American should be proud of, as they enter Haiti. The point of this article is to instead of invading Haiti and ending human rights violations, invade New York and Bridgeport and end human rights violations.

Collin Powell Kicks Off Presidential Bid?

By Alexander Handy
Staff writer

There have been whispers in Washington about the presidential prospects of Collin Powell for President of the United States of America. These rumors may definitely be fueled with the successful triumphant envoy of negotiators, of which General Powell (ret) accompanied to Haiti. Powell was able to successfully negotiate an agreement with the Haitian General Raul Cenais which will hopefully lead to a peaceful landing of U.S. troops and the return of Jean-Bertrand Aristide, the elected Haitian President, to power. What does this do for Collin Powell the Joint Chief of Staff to President George Bush during the Gulf war? This will be a big plus for him and will make him a most definite shoe in for a vice-presidential nomination on either party.

Does this mean that President Bill Clinton will have to contend to dump Al "the Woodman" Gore?

There are a number of reasons why Collin Powell would be an excellent choice for the vice-president. Collin Powell's name on the ballot or even as a write-in candidate in the Democratic primary will be the most serious challenge to an incumbent president since Ronald Reagan's attempt to take the nomination away from Gerald Ford in the 1976 New Hampshire Republican primary. He is the one man who could give Clinton a run-for-your-nomination in the primaries.

It is questionable what would happen if Powell were to run as an independent, since running on a third party can upset the odds heavily against the candidate. He would be the most likely candidate to win the presidency on a third party ticket because with a name like Powell anything is possible. Clinton is a weak general and Collin Powell, if unable to take the nomination in the primaries, will be Clinton's most serious threat in the general election, if Powell chooses to run as a Republican.

How will Clinton attack Powell as a Republican? Claiming that the Republicans have neglected the poor and the minorities will not have any credibility with a successful black man like Powell. He was born in Haiti's Kitchen and was able to pull himself out to become one of the most famous and respected black men in American history. He did not turn to selling a car, as many people do, especially during hard times in poor neighborhoods. Instead, he went to serve his country in the highest military offices, running the United States military and making it what it is today, the most successful and revered fighting force in the world.

Only time will tell what Powell decides to do but with his recent success and his soon to be best selling autobiography coming out, Powell is a man ready to be President.
Endowment: Babson's Miracle Drug for the Future

By Brian Fitzgerald
Staff Writer

Why does the price of tuition at this institution consistently increase at a faster rate than the rate of inflation? The administrators will tell you that in order to pay for the programs, resources, and technology available to all students as well as improve the competitiveness of the school, there must be a yearly increase in tuition. They are not lying. This, however, does not mean that there is no long-term solution to the problem. Realizing there is only so much money to go around, why not consider a colossal unspent resource that staves us in the face, but for some odd reason, we are afraid to confront it—endowment.

Babson’s yearly endowment figure regularly appears like a misprint in the annual report, but year after year nothing seems to be done to try to remedy the woes. How is a poorly supported institution like Babson expected to compete with business schools like Harvard, which enjoy annual endowments approaching the national debt figure? Considering where we presently stand academically, isn’t it scary to envision our potential?

Babson must deal with a low endowment for the sole reason that the customers, namely the students, are not happy. Over 80% of last year’s graduating senior were offered jobs before graduation, so the problem is not a deficiency from this source of funds. But in order to catch a mouse, you must be willing to give up a piece of your cheese.

Although the academic side of college is instrumental in post-academic success, the memories that will stick in alums’ minds are those of their extracurricular activities. Therefore, the only way to spawn generous donation is to pour funds into extracurricular programs now. Perhaps if some additional funds were allocated to building an impervious art to improve this year’s musical, the graduating cast members would be more likely to fuss up some of their hard-earned dollars next year for their alma mater. Simple concept—satisfying rewards. Having a DJ for the basketball games may only cost a couple of hundred dollars, but when more students start filling the gym, the basketball players become happy. Yes, and if a basketball player is happy for four years, then he/she will be left with an enduring perception of Babson.

$5000-CHA-CHINGSSS. A few thousand bucks will buy you an attractive message board to put in Trim, which could advertise the ISIO ski trip. And when more international students have a great time on the slopes of Vermont, those ISIO members become happy when they look back on their fond memories of college.

$DOUBLE-CHA-CHINGSSS.

It only makes sense that if a student spends an enjoyable, fulfilling four years at school, then that student will be apt to water the garden which produced his tasty fruit. In the most basic of terms, a happy alumnus is a happy alum with a checkbook.

Consequences Contemplated

The Information Superhighway... Videophones... Interactive TV... AT&T’s “You Will” advertises... Electric cars... Virtual Reality... Today’s society shows all the signs of the Information Revolution progressing at full tilt, overwhelming the fortress of industrial thought like French revolutionaries storming the Bastille. Communism has fallen before free speech and open markets. Mass production has been discarded in favor of lean production. Fascism is retreating in the face of the Global Village. Our society progresses for the sake of progress, continuously developing new ideas and perfecting old ones. All of this is done in the name of making the world a better place, but will it really be better? Changes in society are still ongoing, as the development of technology and communications forces us to ask what will become of our world. What will be left? What will be discarded? What will we change? Of course, these questions lead up to the big query that many think of but few answer. Where are we going? Like the revolutionaries who served the monarchy their ultimate sentence with the guillotine, we are caught up in the moment, fascinated and confused by the great changes we are witnessing, yet we give little thought to what these changes have in store for us.

The greatest buzzword of the Information Revolution is the so-called Information Superhighway, or Infohohan for those of us who strive to stay hip with the slang. This convergence of various media promises to be as monumental as the introduction of the railroad. Yet, the Infohohan promises more than 500 TV channels and the obscurization of the video store. It is the foundation for a new lifestyle that is geared towards meeting kindred souls who live on the other side of the world. It promises the rich potential of equalizing people so that they won’t be judged on their gender or race, but on their thoughts and tastes. If all you know about me is what you read here, then do you know if I’m white, oriental, black or hispanic? Is a name like P. R. feminine or masculine? Does it really matter?

As with any invention, a great potential for benefits represents a great potential for curses. The Infohohan can become the ball that will leave us chained to our homes. With the ability to shop, talk, work, and be entertained from your living room, do you really need to walk out your door? If a virtual experience is great, the real thing... is the real experience all that necessary? In addition, while the Infohohan can be a great tool for communication, the tool can be abused. It is a widely-accepted notion that the media has an amazing influence over how we live and think. By giving the media an even stronger arm, the Information Superhighway, we increase their influence over our lives, and how many of us believe the media enough to believe that they will be a good influence? Even if the need for control is recognized, how does one control a communications infrastructure that is not limited by national boundaries?

Finally, the whole idea that our world is becoming technologically advanced forces us to adapt to such a situation. We must become more technologically savvy or become obsolete. While this in itself doesn’t present as much of a threat to students such as ourselves, imagine the problems that will be added to the inner city when the underprivileged find themselves marginalized by technology.

There is a grassy plain within the certain circles for the notion that information wants to be free. In essence, access to the Infohohan must be like our modern telephone system. Everyone is provided with indiscriminates, cheap, easy access. In addition, content must not be determined by an oligarchy of monopolistic media conglomerates, but by the common man. Finally, government interference must be kept to a minimum, existing only to ensure that no single party has too much of an influence over what travels on the Infohohan. Our emerging information culture must be left as an open, self-policing entity that will develop into a sustainable, nurturing environment of its own.

I really wish I could believe that. I really wish that I could throw all of my faith into such an optimistic approach, but I’m aware of too many ifs and assumptions that this theory hasn’t itself on. It warrants further thought, and further thought must be given. We all feel the impact that technology places upon our lives, and some of us will be in a position to affect the influence that it has on society. The French went through a bloody period of political instability following their revolution because they never had a solid plan about how to manage themselves once they overthrew the monarchy. If we do not give thought to what technology has in store for us then we are bound to make the same mistake.

I’m madder than a feminist with a flat tire this week, ‘cause they gave me those pea-brained ninnies at NASA a rest. This time they want to blow up the damn moon and probably will, unless we all get together and do something about it pretty quick.

The WVN, a continuing story in the side of NASA, has learned that the space agency, through the advice of some bozo out of Iowa State named Alexander Abain, plans on sending 3 rockets tipped with hydrogen warheads up there to blow our only satellite to smithereens. Abain figures that if we blow up the moon and it all lands in the Pacific Ocean, it’ll tilt the earth’s axis enough to improve the planet’s weather conditions. It’ll be compensated to allow a more even distribution of the sun’s rays and it could stop scorching hot summers and freezing cold winters. We could grow crops where we now only have desert sand. People will spend more time outdoors and be “healthier,” beam the jubilant Abain.

From what I understand, the measure was first brought up back in 1991, and even though it was considered accurate, it was not deemed necessary. But since then, because of droughts, floods, hurricanes and the world’s population growing at a blistering pace, it has been resurrected.

After meeting with world leaders, President Clinton issued a secret order to the U.S. space agency authorizing the destruction of the moon, and the real kicker here is that the public will be notified only after the missiles have been launched. The theory is that the Earth, which right now has a 66.3% chance of collision, is augmented to 90 degrees after the moon is blown up and it all lands in the Pacific.

Thus, the even distribution of sunlight would give us spring and summer all year round.

You know, I didn’t get to be a Dean by being a dope. They don’t give those Dean things out; you have to earn them. And I say you don’t have to blow the moon up to solve world hunger.

There’s a whole lot of salt water out there just waiting for some genius to figure out how to turn it to fresh. And with all that water, you could grow corn on a rock. Hell, just a couple of weeks ago, we found out NASA planted apple and orange trees up there. Now they want to blow it up?

And what about the space alien cemetery discovered up there last year?

Please, it’s your duty as red-blooded Americans to write your Congressman, have bumper stickers made up, do anything. This isn’t a Saturn with about 20 of them things floating around. We only got one and I happen to like it. I’m sure you all remember how the WVN readers saved the day when China planned on knocking the Earth out of its orbit by having its huge population all jump up and down at the exact same time. Well, a cleverly planned counter-jumph by heroic Americans and WVN readers all over the world saved the Earth.

And besides, I’m dying to try one of them apples.

Well, it’s good to end the week on a happy note. The amazing cult with the human face, Mannie Jr., will definitely begin racing next year. Trainer Tommy Suay’s, who has trained Mannie since birth, says though he may not be Kentucky Derby material, he has excellent racing instincts and a gallant heart.

Added to the fact that he can speak and has a 1,500, his future looks bright indeed!

Mannie Sr., everyone knows, was created by Dutch geneticist Dr. Peter De Vries, when he chemically enhanced a fertilized horse’s egg with human genetic material.

Mannie Sr. was then brought to a secret horse farm in Kentucky, bred with a mare named Kaya and — voila — Mannie Jr. Now we have two horses out there with human heads, and call it dean’s intuition, but I think there are Mannie more on the way.

On that note I’m history,

The Dean

1. Did you know that the inspiration behind Hall & Oates’ smash hit “Maneater” was really a naked picture Daryl Hall found of Pat Morita?

2. In the fall of 1968, the Beatles’ Paul McCartney was abducted by aliens and secretly replaced by Pat Morita.

Women's C.C.: New and Improved

It was Thursday morning, August 18th, and the Babson Women's Cross Country Team began to arrive at the athletic center. After fundraising and a great deal of planning by Coach Scott Hutchinson and the team members, their hopes were becoming a reality. The team was bound for Gunnison, Colorado, a little town about 200 miles from Denver and 7703 ft above sea level. Not much was located here but Western State College, where the team stayed, a McDonald's, the Flick, the only movie theater within a 30 mile radius, and a ton of empty bar rooms. The team practiced twice a day and enjoyed touring Colorado daily. They returned to Babson, pumped, in shape, and ready to welcome the newcomers.

Rugby Kicks Off

By Ollie Blumgart

Welcome back everyone and “Hi!” to all you new guys. Yet another season of top level rugby is underway with some exciting games scheduled. Three games will qualify the Babson team for the New England Division II Championship at the end of the semester which they came so close to winning last year. The team will also be returning to Providence for the Second Annual New England Seven’s Tournament to defend their title.

The Babson Rugby Club is always looking for new members and would like to see you come and try this exciting sport. Whether you are big or small there is always a place for you on one of the teams. The team’s policy is that everybody plays so basically, you can’t lose - you’ll be a member of the hardest hitting team on campus! Come down to one of the practices on the lower fields to see if you are interested. Practices are on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Fridays at 3:45pm sharp.

Back for another year by popular demand, Around the Boards is here in the Babson Free Press every week to be your inside track to the world of pro hockey. This year’s column is going to keep you up-to-date with all of the happenings in the National Hockey League. In just a few minutes of reading this column, you’ll know what teams are in first place, who the scoring leaders are, what trades have transpired, and who’s on the injured list.

We’ll try to have some fun by incorporating new sections, like “Losers of the Week,” designated to tearing apart those NHL players who don’t have talent, never did, and never will. We’ll keep an update on the “All-Injured List,” the best players in the league who aren’t playing. Also, hopefully with some reader response, there will be a survey each week for “Who’s the best goalie in the NHL?” or “If you could change one thing about the NHL, what would it be?”

The regular season is scheduled to begin on October 1st, barring a strike by the players. We are all anxious for the start of the new season, especially now that Major League Baseball players are playing golf instead of baseball.

The New York Rangers will be trying to defend their Stanley Cup Championship this year, and there will be many new and improved teams vying for that number one spot. Next week, I’ll recap the big trades of the summer, report on the chances of a lockout, and boldly predict how teams are going to perform this year. So sit back, do all of your homework early, and get ready for a great season of hockey. See ya next week!!

The Black Diamant stars it all.

SOX CAN HOBSON

By Scott Sarlan
Managing Editor

After three tumultuous years at the helm of the sinking ship we know as the Red Sox, Butch Hobson was relieved of his duties by Boston manager, Celia Lavern Hobson. The former Red Sox manager was named in the late 1970s, as a shuffling third baseman. He hit 30 homers in 1979 for the Red Sox but was shipped off to California in an early 80s clearance sale.

Hobson returned to the Red Sox in 1989 as a minor league manager, and quickly moved up the ranks in the minors to Pawtucket. When other teams began inquiring about obtaining Hobson as their manager, the Sox GM Lou German promoted Hobson to the big show, firing the lovable Joe Morgan. Morgan’s Magic led the Sox to division titles in 1990 and 1991. But, the risk of losing Morgan was enough reason to can Morgan and promote Bunch. Some said Hobson was brought up to the majors too soon, and was not skilled enough to handle big league players and their big league egos. Hobson’s first encounter as Sox skipper occurred in spring training of 1992, as Roger Clemens appeared to camp late. Rather than laying down the law to his players and showing who was in charge, Hobson simply let Clemens’ tardiness slide.

During Hobson’s reign, the Red Sox took a tumble. For the first time in their 150-year history, the team finished below .500. During the 1993 season, the Red Sox started strong, but a midseason swoon (often in May) saw them fall out of the playoffs. In 1994, the Red Sox were 30-60-6 when the strike began. The team missed the playoffs for the first time since 1965.

Hobson’s tenure as Sox manager spanned one season, 1994. During that season, the team finished 68-94, last in the American League East. Hobson was fired after the season ended.

The Wacky World of College Football

By Jeff Patterson
Staff Writer

Last week had its share of moments in the Wacky World of College Football. Boston College went from a team that was pummeling the Gators to a team that was pummeling the Gators at the Coliseum. Boston College is no stranger to the Gators, as they have proven they have a great defense to compliment their offense. But, the Gators seemed to be rated too highly.

Auburn and Michigan State, two teams that were ranked in the top five, played a close game. The Tigers finally prevailed after a 26-24 victory. Auburn is now tied with Alabama for the SEC championship.

The Bonds College Squad Team has reserved all courts for each Monday night from 6:00 to 8:00 PM effective 9/21/94. On Monday, September 26 from 6:00 to 8:00 PM, the Babson College Squad Team will hold an open session Round-Robin for all returning players and anyone else interested in playing in the upcoming season. For more information, call either Bryan Mathews at 239-9996 or Arco Latza at 347-5808.

Please remember, goggles and white sole shoes are required. The N.I.S.R.A. has announced that all matches for the 1994-95 season will be played with the Soft Ball.

Due to injuries, the Babson Women’s Tennis Team is looking for players. Anyone interested should call coach Marybeth Crabtree at x4250.

Sports Announcements

April 1994 saved Hobson’s job...for the time being. As injuries caught up with the Sox...

Rather than laying down the law to his players and showing who was in charge, Hobson simply let Clemens’ tardiness slide.

...and drained the roster, the losses finally caught up with Hobson. Where the plug was pulled on the 1994 season, GM Dan Duquette pulled the plug on the manager’s tenure.

The big question now is, who will replace Butch in the hot seat on the Sox bench? One name which appears on many want lists is that of Tony La Russa, whose deal with Oakland is up next month. Bobby Valentine, former Texas manager, is now coaching for the Japanese team, the Yakult Swallows. He would love to return to the majors. Should the Sox choose to stay within the family, John Wathan could fit in nicely, as well as Frank White (though he may not want the stress associated with the top spot). That is, of course, assuming we ever see major league baseball again.
Sarian Files

What a week in sports it has been. Cam Neely's return brightened future prospects for the Bruins, while the NFL regressed to its uniforms of the past. More on that later, but for now, some tidbits of knowledge you may have missed...

What a shame the baseball strike had to bring such an abrupt end to a few Hall of Fame careers. Everyone remembers 'Ted Williams' home run in his last at-bat, Babe Ruth's 3 home runs in one game in his last week, and even Yaz last-at-bat, a pop-up against the Cleveland Indians. Great players like Andre Dawson and Kent Hirsh will never have the opportunity for the one last moment of glory. Dawson's career ended with a rainout; fitting for his team as a whole, but unjust for the great slugger known as The Hawk.

Should Drew Bledsoe maintain his incredible pace of yardage, he would finish the season with over 6,200 yards. Yardage figures like those should guarantee a championship, right? Not when the defense is on a pace to allow 37 points per game, or 560 points this season.

-Deion Sanders signed with the San Francisco 49ers for $1 million, far below the dollar figures "Prime Time" was offered to bring his talent elsewhere (New Orleans). What is not known, though, is Sanders' deal with Nike will pay Deion somewhere in the neighborhood of 82-3 million if he signs with a contending team. Sanders claims no such deal exists, but it appears like Deion is more interested in helping his wallet than his team.

-In celebration of the league's 75th anniversary, the NFL teams donned nostalgic garb for this past week's games. Some, such as the Piscator, only had to reach back a bit into the closet for their old uniforms. Other teams, including the Bears, Packers, and Steelers, reminded us of why fashions of the '70s and '80s are no longer in fashion. At least no one suited up with bell-bottom uniforms or platform cleats.

-Gaining an early jump on the Hot Stone League; the Red Sox are hunting for several key needs this winter. One main item the Sox lack is another starter, a role which would be nicely filled by Blackjack McDowell, a free agent. A healthy Frank Velela, combined with Clemens, a more experienced Aaron Sele, super prospect Frankie Rodriguez, and McDowell would make for an imposing rotation. Should any of these options not pan out, is there a fifth starter between Chris Naylor, Brian Conroy, and Tim Vanegmond?

-New NBA rules this season will shorten the 3 point line to 22 feet, from its original distance which varied from 22 to 29 feet on the sides, out to 23½ at the top of the key. Players like Reggie Miller and Michael Adams become much more valuable to their teams now, but Dee Brown, Blue Edwards, and Rick Fox (should he return) will give the Celtics an outside threat, something lacking since the days of Larry Bird.

Babson Field Hockey Back For Another
Strong Season
By Alan Jackson
Contributing Writer

The 1994 Babson Women's Field Hockey Team, consisting of two seniors, six juniors, six sophomores, and five freshmen, is ready for another great season. Already this season, Babo is 2-1-1 with victories over Assumption College (2-0) and WNEC (2-0). Co-captains Jennifer 'Peacock' Archambault and Andrea "AJ" Marchion plan to carry the team to a successful season, with the help of returning players Dawn O'Connell, Susan Hanson, Carolinas Vargas, Angela Marchion, Nicole Manning, Megan Easterby, Joanna McGowan, Beth Cranston, Andrea Burtine, and Lynn Marie Cerce.

Perhaps the most exciting addition to the team is the new coaching staff. Head coach Cindy Bridgeham has already demonstrated her Olympic expertise by carrying the team through two shut-outs. Sandy was a two-year All-American at the University of New Hampshire, the Nationa...
Sports Soundoff

By Dave Bugbee
Staff Writer

It’s mid-September and pennant races should be very exciting. Matt Williams, Frank Thomas, Ken Griffey Jr., and Jeff Bagwell should be chasing Roger Maris’ 61 home run record.

Tony Gwynn should be steering with an incredible 400 batting average. Cal Ripken Jr. should be playing baseball.

But alas, the baseball season is over. Why? Because the owners want a salary cap and the players don’t. Baseball is on strike because of a weakness in the human condition called greed.

It is hard to feel sorry for either side as they fight for larger parts of the baseball pie, where every piece is worth millions of dollars. The players play a game for six months and get paid millions. They try to feed us this crap that baseball’s a business. Baseball is a game. It always was and always will be. No matter how long this strike goes on, no matter how much the two sides haggle about money, baseball will remain a game.

The baseball strike of 1994 has produced no winners, just a lot of losers. Players are losing millions. Owners are losing even more. Taxi drivers, concession stands, vendors, and countless others who rely on baseball to boost business are also losing out. But, perhaps the biggest losers of all are the fans. Just as baseball was in the midst of one of its most exciting seasons with monumental records in jeopardy, a juiced up baseball, and a Cleveland Indians team vying for a pennant, baseball strikes.

I don’t know who is right nor do I know how this will be resolved. How much money is enough? How much better is it to have $3 mil as opposed to $2 mil? How high does an owner’s net income have to be? How much money does a person need? Will more money translate into more happiness in one’s life? These are the questions hovering over baseball at this hour, questions of money and greed. Maybe I was wrong. Maybe baseball is no longer a game.

Sports Trivia Question of the Week

Congratulations to Chris Keenan, Tynon Pathak, and Steve Glove for being the three contestees to correctly identify Mike Davis as the Los Angeles Dodger who was on base when Kirk Gibson hit his dramatic home run in game one of the 1988 World Series.

This week’s question: When Dave Winfield was traded during the strike to the Cleveland Indians, he and Eddie Murray technically became only the second pair of teammates to have 400 home runs at the same time. For the pizza, name the first set of teammates to ever accomplish this feat. (Hint: Dave Stapleton and Ed Romero is not correct.)

The first three people to call Derek at 6554 after 7:00 pm on Thursday with the correct answer will win a medium pizza withtone topping and a Coke, compliments of Domino’s. If there is no answer, leave your response along with your name and number. Good luck!!!

Women's Soccer Stumbles
By Mike Conlon
Staff Writer

There's an old saying in soccer that if you can't score, you can't win. Unfortunately for the Babson Women's soccer team, this old adage held true. They faced two of the top teams in New England, and they lost both non-league games. On Saturday, they lost to Bowdoin 1-0, and on Tuesday they suffered a 2-1 defeat at the hands of Salem State College. Their record now stands at 1-2.

In the game against Bowdoin, the Black Bears from Maine scored the winning (and only) goal 25 minutes into the game. Although the Babson women played a bit tentatively at the start, they recovered and managed to put together an impressive showing against nationally-ranked Bowdoin.

Sophomore Betty Price played a strong game for the defense, as she constantly out-hustled the opposition. First year players Kim Burbine and Amy Tracey also had strong outings. Goalie Stephanie Balouraris made a couple of spectacular saves in net, and she kept Babson within striking distance. Although Babson did manage to create a few good scoring opportunities in the second half, they were never able to knock the ball past Bowdoin's All-American goalie-keeper.

In Tuesday's game against Salem State, the Beavers managed to get on the scoreboard, but they failed to show the explosiveness which they had against Framingham State in a 7-0 win earlier this season. Junior Janice Center scored the lone Babson goal. While at times Babson's ball movement was "awesome," they never managed to consistently keep the ball deep in Salem's territory. Babson's attack always seemed to disappear as it zeroed in on the Salem goal. In the last fifteen minutes of the game, Babson valiantly attempted to score the equalizer, but a stiffl Salem defense thwarted their plans. Salem State held on for the 2-1 victory.

Babson will be in action this Saturday at 11 AM. They take on Mount Holyoke College in their New Eight Conference opener.

Richio Burns Bowdoin
By David Onorato
Staff Writer

"Contain Number 9 and push forward as a team!" yelled the head coach of Bowdoin to his players minutes before last Saturday's game. The coach was referring to Babson's star player Craig "O.J." Porter. The Polar Bears responded to their coach's words by scoring first, and also by keeping Porter scoreless throughout the exciting game. They may have contained #9, but they certainly didn't contain #18, Nick Richio. Richio exploded with two goals and a key assist to Marcus Olsipson for the go-ahead goal in the first overtime.

-His graceful moves and all-out hustle had the fans speechless as he nearly scored twice with two sweet shots.-

The first half started out rough for the Beavers as Nick Maggipinto put the Polar Bears on top early. For the first 30 minutes Bowdoin controlled the ball and kept Babson's opportunities to a minimum. Babson looked flat until Nick Richio received a nice cross from the fancy footwork of Marcus Olsipson and promptly tied the game. Richio pumped the crowd as he ran across the field and jumped high into the awaiting arms of keeper Josh Todd. Richio's emotion picked up Babson's play as they controlled the momentum for the remainder of the half.

Early in the second half Porter started to take control. His graceful moves and all-out hustle had the fans speechless as he nearly scored twice with two sweet shots. O.J. was receiving increased attention from Bowdoin and he should be credited for still standing out. Ten minutes into the second half play started to get physical as two Bowdoin players had to leave the game with serious injuries. Both goalies were steady in the second stanza keeping the score tied after regulation.

The crucial moment in the game came just five minutes into the first overtime. Nick Richio struck again. Racing down the field with the ball he unselfishly centered the rock towards the middle where some of his teammates had just the right read. Richio then proceeded to perform a high-flying flip in front of the raucous crowd that only fueled the frenzy. Nick "Flip" Richio is fast becoming a crowd favorite with his talented play and unbridled enthusiasm.

The second overtime was all Babson as Richio struck yet again with a penalty kick. Due to the heat and most likely fatigue, Nick didn't perform for the crowd after this final goal. Jim Sullivan, David Cohen, Pat Cavanaugh, Brian Zoldal, Rocco Mastromahonico, and captain Andy Lynch all helped pace Babson to an impressive 3-1 win over rival Bowdoin. With wins in their first two games of the season the Beavers have proved that they are for real.
